NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING.

Factors That Make for Its Success.

Every retail florist feels it his bounden duty to keep up some sort of a show of advertising in the local newspapers, and often—very often—he is at a loss to know what to talk about and just how to tell his story so that it will produce the desired result—more business.

No argument is needed to prove that modern, scientific advertising pays; this can be said without reserve—it is a well supported fact.

During the last few years there has been a great improvement in the methods of modern merchandising, and better advertising methods have had a great deal to do with this advancement.

To a more extended knowledge of newspaper advertising is due the fact that business success today is attained in a few years, where formerly it required three-quarters of a lifetime.

If you have never advertised your business, there is no better time to make the start than the present.

Spring is nigh, with its balmy days, bright sunshine, green grass and singing birds—good themes for the poet.

Spring Flowers—Easter Floral Displays—Seed Planting Time, etc.—make equally good themes for florists' retail advertising.

In starting a campaign of local newspaper advertising, you do so with the hope that it will "make good." Of course!

Then never make the foolish mistake of dashing off a few hastily written lines—while the messenger waits—and expect results.

Successful advertising is never prepared in a hurry.

If it was, there would be more successful advertisers and fewer professional advertising men.

Careful Preparation of Copy.

A certain advertiser contracted for a quarter-page space with a leading newspaper at 5 p. m. one beautiful autumn afternoon.

The paper would close its forms to go to press the next morning at nine o'clock. The said advertiser 'phoned the expert ad-writer whom he employed to have copy ready for the ad by 8:30 the next morning.

On being informed by his advertising man that it was impossible to produce a strong piece of copy in the time allotted, he decided to write the ad himself—and he did so.

The ad—well, it didn't pull. Strange, wasn't it?

The mere purchase of space in your newspaper—which you are positive circulates among your prospective customers and whose pages you have reason to believe are carefully perused by your likely patrons—I say, the mere purchase of this space is but the beginning of your advertising success.

When you pay for advertising space, what are you supposed to pay for? Type, paper, ink? No, hardly!

You intend paying for an effect in the minds of the people—an effect that is intangible as air, yet as permanent as steel beams.

Is your advertising creating this effect? Is it driving home the truth about your business and turning into your store the patronage you justly deserve by right of reputable, clean, high grade merchandising?

If it isn't, something is wrong. Look for the cause.

Remember this fact—advertising copy must fit the reader and not the writer.

The advertisement that pleases the advertiser—suits his eye and tickles his vanity—is not always the ad that brings the business.

Overcrowded Space.

Some one has well said that "advertising should contain little black matter, more white matter—but a great deal of gray matter."

It is indeed pathetic to see how some

New propositions are forced upon the prospective customer at most unexpected moments.

The advertiser has constant entree where no salesman would be tolerated, and even the most intimate friend would be forbidden to discuss business matters.

A great deal has been written on the subject of advertising and advertisement writing—much of which is mere theory, devoid of any worth in practice.

And yet, if it wasn't for the divers theories, no one would arrive anywhere—except by sheer good luck or fortunate chance.

Elements of Success.

What are the basic elements of successful advertising?

Let us begin at the beginning:

First—we must have ideas.

Second—words; these two are one.

Singly and separately they are without avail; coupled and united they make for success as perhaps no other single element in commercial life.

"It's words that make another man's mare go your road."

Words, mark you—driven by ideas.

But ideas and words take time—lots of it, too.

Well deliberated, well thought out, well chosen, they take a vast deal of time. And right here is the rub and the reason for much of the poor advertising of the retail florists' trade.

The trouble is, the florist refuses to take the necessary time to write effective advertising. He is too busy!

Flowers for "Events"

There are times and events which seem to demand the presence of flowers—and when these occasions do arise it is well to know just where you can find the choicest and finest variety at most moderate prices.

Whether you desire a bouquet of beautiful cut flowers—some blossoms for your home decoration or a funeral tribute to the memory of some departed one, you will find our flowers to be the very best and our prices—invariably moderate.

An Attractive Newspaper Advertisement for a Retail Florist.

retail advertisers crowd their space in order to economize—not realizing that less text, more display and selected material will "pull" infinitely more.

Advertising is nothing more than salesmanship, and it follows that the same reactions of the mind of the reader must be sought as in personal solicitation.

The same individualism may be injected into advertising as into the personal interview—but the advertiser talks to hundreds, while the salesman talks to a few.

If the advertiser's plea is unsuccessful one day, he may come back the next and the next.

He feels that he can't afford to make the sacrifice—and explains the mediocrity on that basis, and he is frank enough to say so—but the fact remains that the advertising specialists, who write business-getting advertisements, frequently spend hours, sometimes days, on a single idea—and there is profit in it when this sacrifice is made.

What is the remedy for the many poorly written advertisements?

In just one word—it's "Concentration."

There can be no hard and fast rule for the creation of ideas on any subject.

In advertising you should give careful thought and attention to the specific purpose to be accomplished by your copy.

To this end, think and plan the several steps and stages which the reader's mind would naturally pass through in arriving at the end you are seeking in the advertisement.

Arrange your thoughts and their expression in such a way as to develop the reader's thoughts along lines which will eventually lead him to do as you have suggested.

One idea will suggest another, if this plan is followed.

Power of Repetition.

The question is often asked: Is it more advisable for the florist to use a small space several times a week or a larger one once a week?

Let us suppose a case:

Suppose one of our large national advertisers—Royal Baking Powder, for instance—was to use its entire annual advertising space in a full-page ad, appearing in all the newspapers simultaneously. What would the results be?

Do you think they would measure up to the returns netted by this firm's present advertising policy? Grave doubts!

Repetition is a big factor in successful advertising.

Royal Baking Powder, "Absolutely Pure," has been so drummed into the minds of the people that they will never forget it.

The same holds true with any line of business.

Small space frequently used is always preferable to large space used occasionally.

A noteworthy example of success attained by the continuous use of small newspaper space, is the firm of Rogers, Peet & Co., New York city.

These ads rarely measure over five inches single column and always contain an attractive illustration—and invariably occupy a preferred position—this is imperative when using small space.

I dare say, that of all the ads appearing in the metropolitan dailies, none are more frequently read than those of the firm above mentioned.

This instance is cited to show what is possible with comparatively small space frequently used.

Necessity of Persistence.

Another point to bear in mind is that your advertising, to be effective, must be continuous.

Don't advertise for a short period and then quit because no returns seem evident.

John Wanamaker says: "If there is one enterprise on earth that a 'quitter' should leave severely alone, it is advertising."

"To make a success of advertising, one must be prepared to stick like a barnacle on a boat's bottom."

"He should know before he begins that he must spend money—lots of it."

"Somebody must tell him, also, that he cannot hope to reap results commensurate with his expenditure early in the game.

"Advertising doesn't jerk—it pulls. It begins very gently at first, but the pull is steady."

"It increases day by day and year by year until it exerts an irresistible power."

Spasmodic advertising will bring certain results—but to get a steady stream of customers week in and week out, you must go after them unceasingly.

The florist who changes his ad every week and has it carefully written with a view of attracting the attention and interest of all readers of the paper, is the one who is constantly enlarging his stock and his quarters.

He wants the business and he goes after it.

To accomplish this he tells the public every week what he has to sell, and invites them, in the most attractive words at his command, to come in and buy.

There is only one thing more important than a new ad every week—and that is, to tell the truth in every ad.

A well written, truth-telling ad will work wonders for any retail florist if presented to the public every week.

MAKING UP BASKETS.

Plants to Be Used.

In the notes published February 20 I gave some of the reasons why I think every florist who sells at retail should push made-up baskets of plants, and I gave some of my ideas, gleaned from experience, as to what kinds of baskets are to be chosen for this purpose. We now come to what to put in the baskets, and how.

The selection of the plants, of course, depends on the season, as well as on the wishes of the customer and the occasion for which the basket is to be used. For instance, if a basket is wanted for a store opening in the spring, you would not use foliage plants. Then again, you must always have some regard for the appropriateness of the colors. If a basket is to be presented to some ward politician or used at a store opening, make it as showy as your stock at hand will permit, but if it is to be a gift to some friend or host of the purchaser, be a little more careful about the colors. If you are decorating a home for a social function and wish to use a basket in some room, see that it is in keeping with the interior finish of the room.

When planting a basket with a handle, see that the latter is up above the plants or that the plants extend considerably over the top of the handle, as the effect is spoiled if the plants and the handle are too nearly the same height.

The Use of Ribbons.

Should we use ribbon on that basket? Such a question often arises and the answer usually rests with the florist. To my mind there is no basket but what can be improved upon with a ribbon to match. Of course, this can also be overdone. A pretty rosette, either on the handle or between the flowers, will often suffice. Stretching the ribbon from one side to the other and pinning a bow or rosette at each end, is another pretty scheme. At Christmas, of course, red would be the best color to use, excepting with begonias or pink or lavender cyclamens. The all-silk ribbon which runs, for instance, from a delicate pink to a dark green, or some such combination, is very effective. Yellow is good to use in fall, with foliage plants. At Easter purple and white are good colors.

Various Plant Combinations.

While there is a great variety of stock available for plant baskets from Christmas to Easter, one illustration will suffice and the florist's own stock at hand will suggest many other pleasing combinations. The basket pictured contains straggly Azalea Hexe or Firefly in the background. A white cyclamen and a single dracæna add color. The dracæna, kentia and fern add a little variety to the effect and the ribbon is looped from one handle to the other, with a bow on each.

In a hamper of birchbark or wicker-work, almost any plant looks well. This style of basket you will find a little more difficult to make up than the regular style. Use some bushy plant for the body and then something tall to stand out between, as, for instance, a cocos. Tie a bow to match, either on top of the cover or on its edge.

Dracæna terminalis is effective in basket work.

A prettily arranged basket of begonias will please the ladies. This may be a dainty handle basket, with a bow of delicate pink or blue ribbon tied to the handle.

There is really no limit to the number of pretty combinations a floral artist can make in the basket line. In fact, it does not even require an artist, as any man with good taste can arrange some nice baskets.

At Easter, when we have plenty of lilies and such a great variety of other plants at our disposal, is the time to display baskets. The REVIEW frequently shows half-tones of plant arrangements, some of which are exceptionally fine. An observing person can learn much from these studies.

At times when you have no blooming plants at your service, there are many palms, crotons, dracænas, ferns, pandanus, etc., which will make fine combinations.

In planting baskets you must exercise the same care about not having the plants looking stiff as you would in making up a bouquet or spray of funeral flowers.

HUGO SCHROETER.

EASTER LILIES.

I have 200 multiflorum lilies and 100 giganteum lilies that were planted last October. They were outside and brought in about three weeks ago, and are now from three to five inches high. Can I bring these in for Easter, and what treatment would you advise?

W. J. S.

I am afraid it will be no use your attempting to force your lilies into bloom for Easter if they are no more than from three to five inches high now. The date of Easter this year comes unusually late, being April 19, but to be fairly certain of having them in flower at that time the buds should be seen when Lent comes in, which this year was on March 4. Rather than make a futile effort to flower them for Easter, it will be much better to keep them in a moderately cool house, say 45 degrees at night, and hold them for Memorial day, when such flowers are in good demand.

Indoor Culture.

There is no question as to indoor culture being practical, even from a commercial standpoint, and in these days of rapid changes it is fitting that this method should receive attention.

It will not do, however, to discard that which has given good results and accept without question a plan which may not be suited to every grower's requirements. My experience with indoor culture began in the year 1901, when we grew the old varieties, such as Eldorado, Daybreak and Jubilee, under glass all summer. The venture demonstrated the possibility of its being done successfully and that by this means long-stemmed flowers could be had early in the season. But after careful comparisons, extending over several years, with results obtained from field-grown plants of the same varieties, it could not be said to add sufficiently to the returns to offset the extra attention and increased expenses demanded by the method.

At that time carnations commanded only a moderate price, but were gaining in favor, and with the birth of Lawson we saw not only a substantial advance in the popularity and profitableness of the divine flower, but also secured a variety peculiarly suited to indoor culture.

As was predicted at the time of this variety's introduction, many changes have come about, one of the most noticeable being the increased tendency to grow under glass all summer. It would be against my general principles to discourage the practice of any system calculated to bring about an advance in carnation culture, but I think it proper to present the following conclusions, reached after several years' close observation and inquiry.

What Have Experiments Proved?

To the large wholesale grower or the carnation specialist, indoor culture, at least to some extent, is almost imperative, but to the average grower of a general line for his own retail trade this method offers no particular inducement, and to none does this plan present any advantage unless his market appreciates and demands first-class, long-stemmed stock and is willing to pay accordingly.

We occasionally read reports of instances where indoor-grown plants have given a remarkable yield over field-grown ones, when perhaps the grower leaned somewhat toward the former method at the outset. Quite likely, if two growers of equal ability had each been given a house to demonstrate the possibilities of the two methods, the results would not have been far apart at the season's end.

Now, I do not mean to imply that there was any partiality shown in the experiment of Dr. Galloway, nor do I wish to criticise the methods of the Department of Agriculture, but would call attention to the fact that the field-grown plants were not brought in until September, which date at the present time is considered far too late for the commercial grower to entertain hopes of profitable returns. In fact, some of our leading sorts, if held in the field until early fall, give indifferent account of themselves until spring.

My contention has always been that plants should be housed when somewhat under sized; then, in making further growth in the bench soil, their thorough establishment and acclimatization are assured. Benched in September, a month or six weeks of growth essential to their very existence as bread winners is lost.

GEO. S. OSBORN.

Topping Young Plants.

I notice that some of the young plants which were potted out of the first propagation are ready for topping. This should not be neglected after they once come to that stage. Though there may be only a small percentage that need it, yet it should be done at the proper time. You will find that every few days there will be quite a number ready to top, and they should be looked over at least once each week from now on. You need not set over the whole batch of plants if they do not need weeding or cleaning, but just nip out the top of the plant without disturbing the pot. If a large percentage, say half or more, need topping, it will pay to move the whole batch over and clean off any undesirable leaves or weeds. This setting over is good for the plants. It lets fresh air around the pots and sweetens things in general.

As to the proper time for topping, growers generally agree that it is when the plants begin to run up to bud and as soon as you can see the stem between the joints where you want to take the top off. About six joints should remain above the soil after the top is removed. This should be done when the plant is in vigorous growth, and never while the plant is in a starved or stunted condition. In the latter case the breaks would be weak and less numerous, and the result would be poor plants. In fact, no young carnation plant should ever be allowed to get stunted or starved.

While varieties differ widely in regard to the amount of topping required, you will find that in the first topping they are much the same. It is in the succeeding toppings that you must discriminate between the various styles of growth and top accordingly.

Soon after the breaks appear, many of them will need shifting, either into larger pots or into the bench, and you must keep a close watch on them. This

BUYING NEW VARIETIES.

I should like to ask Mr. Osborn how many varieties he thinks a grower who plants, say, 25,000 carnations, can afford to buy each year if he buys not less than 250 of each kind. If he does not buy nearly all the varieties offered, how would he distinguish between the desirable ones and the undesirable ones? We thought we had this problem solved pretty well, but if Mr. Osborn has a better way than ours, we would be pleased to know his method. A. F. J. BAUR.

This inquiry evidently has reference to my recent advice in purchasing new varieties, to arrange for at least 250 cuttings.

I think Mr. Baur has somewhat misunderstood my position as to what constitutes a new variety. Owing to my use of the terms originator, disseminator and new introductions, it might perhaps be inferred that the article had reference wholly to varieties being sent out this year.

To my mind a variety may be said to be new to the trade for at least two years after introduction. It certainly cannot be called old even at three years. The article under question was intended to give advice on the treatment of new arrivals, whether introductions of this year or ones comparatively new to the trade. Under these circumstances it will be seen that the matter of cost, which must enter largely into our calculations, becomes less formidable.

A grower of 25,000 plants would probably have at least ten varieties, and under proper treatment his list would not need replenishing to the extent of more than two varieties each year, on an think the question which concerns the grower for cut flowers is not how many new varieties, of whatever price, he can afford, but how many he needs to replace those showing deterioration. It is just as much of an accomplishment to judge when to let well enough alone as to select a variety to supersede one to be discontinued.

As to how a grower is to distinguish between the desirable and undesirable ones offered each year, I fail to see why the average grower should take upon himself the task of growing even a small quantity of each year's introductions, when by inquiry, visits to up-to-date establishments and close perusal of our valuable trade papers, he is able to learn not only of a variety's behavior away from home, but with what favor it is received by the public.

As remarked in the article in question, if it is desired to grow a few for hybridizing purposes or personal reasons, that is another matter, and of course the requirements of the rooted cutting specialist do not enter into this discussion. There is a fast gaining disposition to let the other fellow try varieties in their first year when the price is $10 or $12 per hundred, and the day is fast approaching, if not already at hand, when the second year of a variety's existence in the trade brings its reward to the introducer of a meritorious variety, it being but natural that buyers should go to headquarters for stock.

My method will not solve the problem any better than Mr. Baur's, nor do I believe any one alone ever will accomplish the feat, but it would seem in these progressive days as if the grower could be provided against the necessity of buying a "pig in a bag" at any time.

Can we hope that, in the near future, the Carnation Society may devise some means whereby, without fear or favor, the undesirable will be separated from the desirable? GEO. S. OSBORN.

MANURE CONTAINING SHAVINGS.

Will horse manure containing shavings be all right to mix with soil for carnation houses? B. S.

Stable manure with shavings is not as good as where straw has been used for bedding. I cannot say that the shavings do any particular damage if they have time to rot, but they contain no plant food, while the straw does. Avoid that kind of manure if you can get the straw manure. A. F. J. B.

CARNATION WELCOME.

Welcome originated with one of the growers for the New York market, but when disseminated was not brought to the attention of any considerable proportion of the western growers, so that this house at Joliet is of special interest. A. T. Pyfer, manager of the Chicago Carnation Co., says Welcome is everything that its name implies, because the quality speaks for itself and the crop shown in this illustration is not exceptional, it having given a steady and liberal cut all through the season to date. The color is much like Winsor and at Joliet they grow it with a stem as long and strong as that of Enchantress. Mr. Pyfer says the variety is perfectly healthy and produces as much as Lawson did when in its prime.

is especially true a little later, when the sun gets strong and the pots dry out more quickly. Topping and shifting should not take place at the same time, if it can be avoided. Better do it ten days before or after the shifting. The breaks will be stronger. Be sure the young plants get the full sun and plenty of ventilation, and keep them clean of weeds and diseased foliage of any kind. Run them about as near 50 degrees as you can. A. F. J. BAUR.

average. But, to make ample allowance, we will assume he purchases 250 cuttings each of three sorts, one at $100 and two at $50 per thousand, necessitating an outlay of $50, which sum, I think, would not be out of proportion to the volume of business likely to be done.

Mr. Baur will doubtless excuse my not following the exact wording of his opening question, it being manifestly impossible for me to presume what a grower should be able to afford. Then, too, I

STIGMONOSE AND RUST.

I enclose leaves of the carnations Pat-ten, Peary, Joost and Harlowarden which are diseased. What disease is it? Can you give a remedy for it? Nearly all the plants are affected, some not as badly as others. Will young stock propagated from these plants also be affected, if properly taken care of and grown outdoors? They are from plants bought last fall. Will there be any danger of the disease spreading to our other carnations which are not affected, if planted in the same field? B.S.

The leaves you sent were so badly dried up that it was almost impossible to decide what the trouble is. In fact, they looked more like old leaves from the bottom of the plants, which would naturally have been dead for want of air and light. There seem to be, however, some stigmonose spots on some of them, and also some eruptions on the surfaces, like those of rust before the spores have burst out in powder form.

If the plants are infested badly with the stigmonose, which you can readily detect by the light-colored spots inside of the young foliage, you would better not propagate from those plants that show it. It will be sure to appear next season, even though the young plants will apparently outgrow it in the field. It will not spread from one plant to another unless the plant is very much weakened or is punctured by insects, which makes openings for the bacteria to enter the leaves. The rust is not so serious and can be more easily controlled. Keep the foliage dry as much as possible and it will remain practically inactive. Unless the plants are badly affected you need not hesitate to propagate from them. But take young shoots which show none of those brown eruptions. The rust will spread if conditions are favorable to its development.

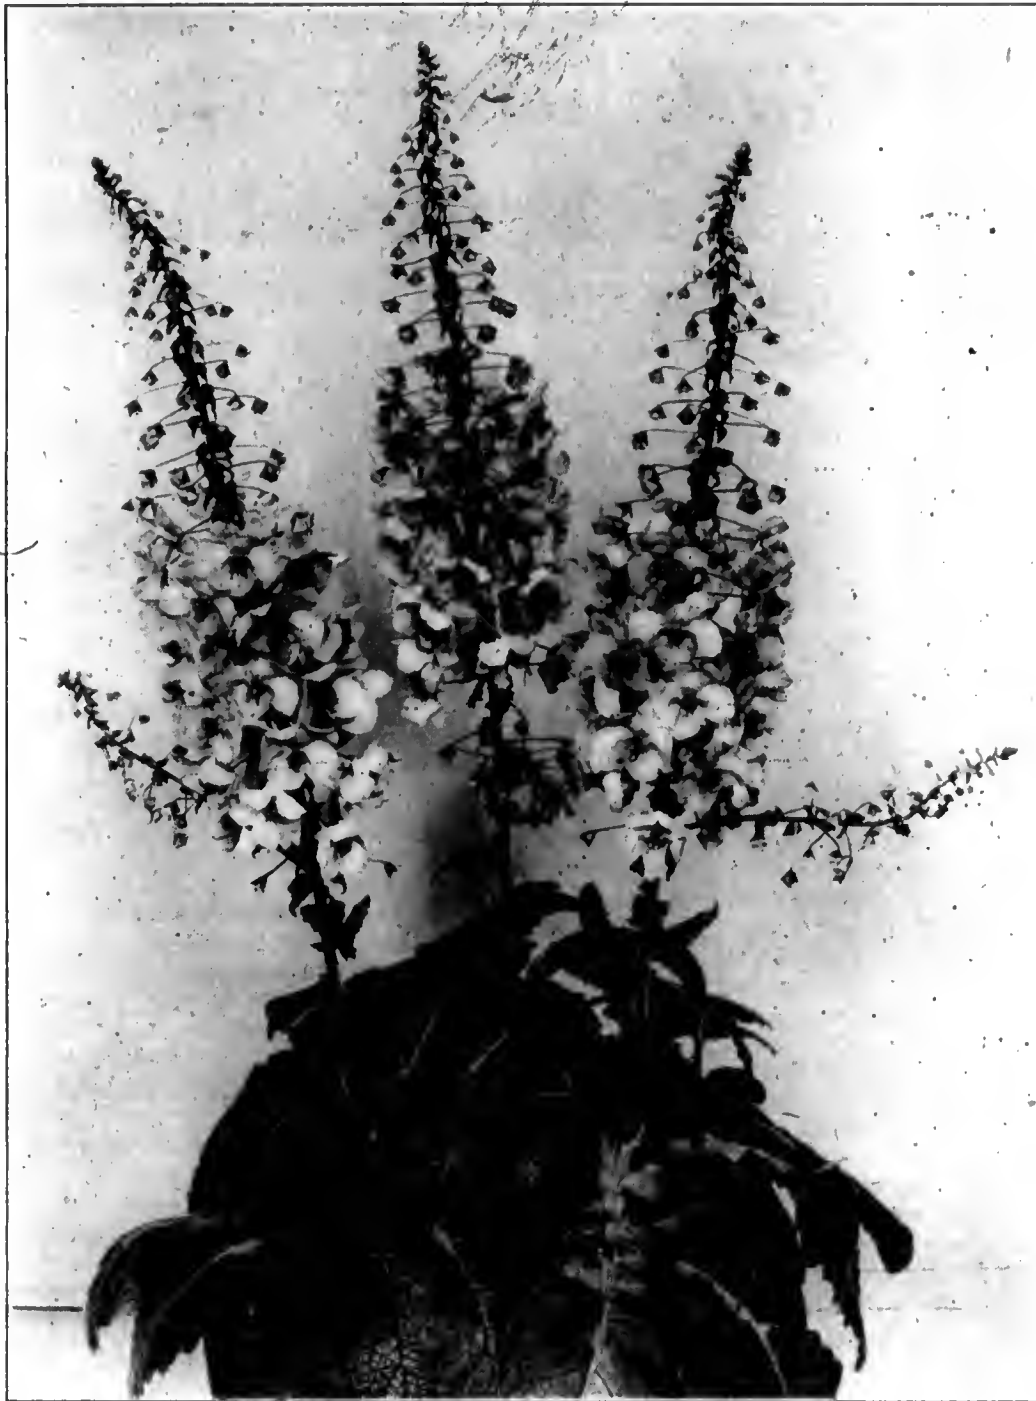

On Harlowarden and all crimson varieties, and also on some red sorts, these stigmonose spots turn dark as the leaves mature. A. F. J. B.

CELSIA ARCTURUS.

The pretty, half hardy greenhouse plant, Celsia Arcturus, is deserving the attention of commercial growers. Two exhibits of it before the Massachusetts Horticultural Society January 25 attracted much notice. The seeds from which the plants exhibited were grown were sown in heat in March and April and grown on in a cool house. The pan illustrated contained three plants. Grown in this way they are more effective than if grown singly in pots. From seed sown last February a batch of plants raised here were in early June planted in the flower garden. These flowered from August until frost, but were not specially attractive, the flowers not lasting as they would have done during cooler weather. The plants stood 20 degrees below freezing without injury and should therefore prove hardy in the southern states.

The spikes of yellow flowers with purple stamens somewhat resemble the verbascums or mulleins. C. Arcturus attains a height of eighteen inches and, as it remains in bloom for months, should prove a very desirable addition to our list of winter-blooming plants.

Celsia Cretica, a tall growing variety from Crete, is occasionally met with. It attains a height of four to six feet and is useful in the herbaceous border. It

W. N. CRAIG.

GERANIUMS DAMPING OFF.

I am sending you specimens of young geranium plants. Can you tell me the cause of the condition they are in and a preventive or cure? I have thought that perhaps they were grown too warm and that putting them in a cool house at time of shifting from 2¼-inch pots to 3-inch pots might have caused the trouble. We had the young plants in a house kept at 60 degrees at night, that being the only place available for them. They did well while there, but when we shifted them, in the first part of January, into a house kept at 50 degrees at night, they did not start to grow for a long time. In fact, they have just started now. We used bone meal in the soil. Out of about 1,400 plants we will lose about 200 from this cause. They are full of small worms. Were they the cause of the trouble or do you think they were attracted there by decomposition already having set in? We used soil from chrysanthemum benches for repotting. R. M. & Co.

You certainly made a serious mistake in removing geraniums from a temperature of 60 degrees to one 10 degrees lower after repotting. A much better plan would have been to give them a little more warmth after potting. It is probable that you would have had no trouble had you given your plants the same temperature before and after shifting them into larger pots. A little fine bone is to be recommended for the final potting in preference to animal manure. The latter promotes leaf growth, the former floriferousness. We do not know what attracted the worms. You can easily clean them out by applying some lime water. Too many growers still cling to the idea that "any old soil" will grow geraniums. There could be no greater fallacy. Your old chrysanthemum soil must have been largely exhausted and you will have better success by using some fresh pasture loam for any others you may wish to pot.

Another season, if you winter your plants in a temperature of 45 to 50 degrees, keep a little warmer for a time after repotting and allow the plants to dry out well between waterings, you should have no loss from damping off.

FAIRBURY, ILL.—Kring Bros. have purchased in Chicago the glass and some other material for two new carnation houses, each 30x130, one of which will be built at once. The purchase included a 115 horse-power boiler.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Cannas.

Although some growers do not start their cannas until April 1, it would be well to give the old roots a thorough overhauling, preparatory to dividing and placing them in heat. Shake away all the old soil clinging to the clumps; then, with a strong, sharp knife, cut them in pieces, leaving a good eye to each division. Discard any portions which show signs of decay. They will never do any good. After being divided, the pieces may either be potted separately, placed in flats or stood on the bench. The last method is to be preferred. A covering of moss or cocoanut fiber can be scattered over the bench and the roots stood directly on it. Then, if some more broken moss is dropped among the roots, they will be all right until they are growing and rooting and need potting.

A bench over steam or hot water pipes, affording some bottom heat, and a night temperature of 60 degrees will answer well for cannas. Of course they will grow in a cooler house, but the higher temperature will make them start better. Do not water very freely until growth starts. Avoid soakings with the hose, but spray once or twice a day. The more vigorous growing Italian or orchid-flowering section can be started a little later than the so-called French section.

Bedding Geraniums.

The little geranium plants are now growing vigorously and will need spreading out a little; at least once a week. Attention to this matter will very materially affect the ultimate condition of your stock. If once badly crowded, the plants will never fully recover, no matter how careful attention they may receive. Let the plants dry out well between waterings. Saturation at the roots produces soft plants, which will grow freely but bloom less satisfactorily than is to be wished. Remove the tops from any plants which will yield them. You can still make nice 3-inch pot plants from these, but cuttings inserted later than March 10 cannot be depended upon to develop into as nice plants as your customers will demand. We advise putting these cuttings singly in small pots, in preference to a sand bench. In our experience the former method has always shown a smaller percentage of loss. Much depends on how the plants are treated. If given full sun, with a gentle bottom heat, and allowed to dry out well before being watered, not over five per cent should damp off.

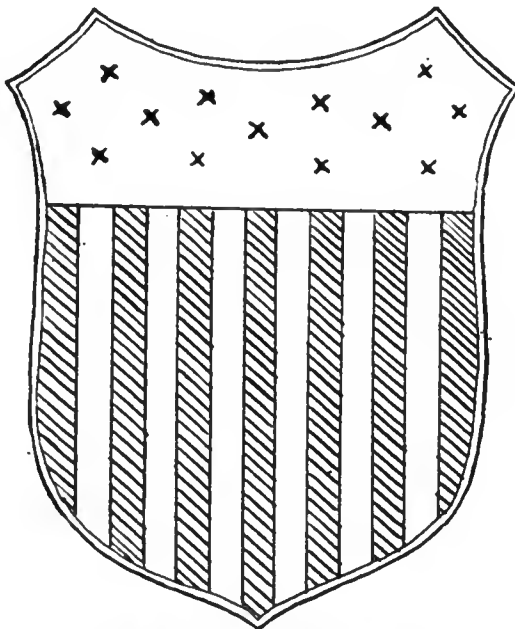

In potting along geraniums, avoid using much animal manure, as it produces a rank, soft growth. A sprinkling of fine bone will give nice, stocky little plants, which will flower more freely than those potted with a percentage of decayed horse or cow manure. After potting, if your soil is damp, let watering wait a day. If you can keep a slightly closer atmosphere for a few days, the plants will do all the better.

Stevia Serrata.

In the rush of other duties, do not entirely forget your stock plants of Stevia serrata. Cut them down quite close and place in a cool, light house. A crop of cuttings will soon appear. It is, of course, somewhat early to propagate these, but if you get in a batch of cuttings, these in turn will yield tops which will give you all the plants you require another season.

Show Pelargoniums.

The late date of Easter makes it possible to have a nice lot of show pelargoniums in flower for that festival. If given their final potting, as suggested a few weeks ago, the roots will now be running freely around the sides of the pots. Do not try any forcing tactics, for pelargoniums will simply not tolerate it. They love a cool, airy house, with plenty of sunshine until the flowers commence to expand, when a light shading will be found beneficial. No further pinching must be done if early flowers are desired. Green aphids must not be allowed any foothold. Spread some fresh tobacco stems once a fortnight among the plants, to keep the aphids in check.

Herbaceous Calceolarias.

It is hardly possible to have herbaceous calceolarias in flower for Easter. May is the month when they are to be seen at their best. The plants should now receive their final potting. A compost of fibrous loam, dried cow manure, a dash of fine bone, some fine charcoal and sand, well mixed, will suit them. Grow them very cool. Anything above freezing will be all right; 40 degrees at night is much better than 50 degrees. The higher temperature will cause aphids to spread alarmingly. Fumigate, without fail, once a week, and it will not trouble you. Calceolarias seem to enjoy a light spraying over on bright days. Let it be light, or you may cause leaf decay.

Dutch Bulbs.

Answering several queries, we would again say that it is still much too early to start hyacinths, tulips or narcissi for Easter. Three weeks should suffice for all but the double tulips, like Couronne d'Or and Murillo, which may be allowed three or four days longer. Remember that your flats and pans of bulbs are full of roots and be sure they do not suffer from lack of water. More bulb failures are due to too little water than to all other causes combined.

Coelogyne Cristata.

Coelogyne cristata is invaluable to commercial growers. Its flowering time is February and March, a season when white flowers are in strong demand. The culture is of the simplest and certainly anyone possessing a few baskets or pans of coelogyne has a good stock in trade, for the flowers are excellent for funeral, corsage and dinner-table uses. A compost of chopped fern fiber and sphagnum moss grows fine *coelogyne*s. When well established, the plants delight during the growing season in occasional waterings of liquid manure. The proper time for rebasketing is just after the flowers are gone. Pull off and throw away the old bulbs which have no leaves and which are often seen standing several deep in pans needing attention. Provide the plants with ample drainage in rebasketing them and water very sparingly for the first two or three months, until the growths are well advanced. Coelogyne cristata enjoys sprayings overhead during the warm months and, when properly established, loves an abundance of water. It grows well in a house kept at 50 to 55 degrees at night in winter. Warmer treatment than this does the plants more injury than good.

Acacias.

The late Easter makes it difficult to hold back some of the acacias. The one mostly in evidence is A. armata or paradoxa. If these have been kept cold, they may now be brought into a house kept at 45 to 50 degrees at night, in which temperature they will flower in good season for Easter. A. pubescens, A. Ricciana, A. Drummondii, and other sorts which are less seen than could be wished, must be grown quite cool if it is wished to retard them until April 19.

Deciduous Flowering Plants.

For such plants as Azalea mollis, deutzias, lilacs, prunus, pyrus and others of a deciduous nature, intended for Easter, six weeks should suffice to flower them, if given at the start a temperature of 55 to 60 degrees at night. Crataegus would be better if started earlier and cooler. Any of this stock which has been pot grown will flower earlier and more satisfactorily than if lifted from the ground. Syringe freely and keep close until the plants break freely. Always remove to a cooler house as the flowers expand.

Azaleas.

All azalea plants intended for Easter should be started by this time. If housed before Lent, they should be in season. Better do a little forcing now than nearer Easter. Many of the plants will throw shoots in advance of flowers. Rub these all off. As there is but a poor call for azaleas after Easter, it would be well to get all the plants possible in flower by that time.

Easter Lilies.

Lent has arrived and this reminds us that if you can see the buds in the tops of your Easter lily shoots so as to count them, you are all right. If you cannot do so, hurry your plants on a little. Of course, we may get some warm weather in April to send them along, but on the other hand we may not, so it is well to be on the safe side. Any plants which are hopelessly late had better be held back for Memorial day, or allowed to flower naturally. There is always a call for a few lilies for funeral and other work. They are particularly useful to the retail country florist, who is often called upon to furnish floral designs at short notice.

DESIGN FOR LARGE SHIELD.

I am desirous of making a very large shield on a large lawn. Will you please publish directions as to how to get the dimensions, etc.? E. S.

E. S. gives very meager information of what he expects to carry out. He does not say whether this shield is for a coat of arms or the conventional design; nor does he give any dimensions of his lawn.

Presuming he wants to display the national colors, the design on page 8 could be used, the size being adjusted to the dimensions of the place where it is to be carried out.

For a very large shield verbenas could be used to good advantage, as they bloom during the entire season and can easily be kept in their places by an occasional pinching along the lines where the colors separate. A border of the golden pyrethrum around the entire bed would look quite well.

Another arrangement for a bed on a smaller scale would be santolina or dwarf sweet alyssum for white, Alternanthera amœna for red and ageratum or Lobelia Crystal Palace for blue.

ALOIS FREY.

MCALISTER, OKLA.—Fire destroyed the boiler-shed and potting-shed at the Weaver & Miller greenhouse February 22. The loss was about $400. Good work by the fire department prevented loss on the greenhouses.

MOVING LARGE PLANTS.

Probably the most remarkable plant pilgrimage this country has ever seen was that ordered by W. J. Dingee, when he decided to move his home from Redwood City to Santa Cruz, Cal. But a few months ago the land shown in the accompanying pictures was bare of tree or shrub growth, while now it is dotted with groups of fine specimen ornamentals and in a short time the work of planting will be completed. All these trees and plants were brought from Redwood City, a distance of about 100 miles, and they filled over twenty freight cars.

The large palm seen at the right in the lower view is forty-five feet tall and when crated for shipment weighed fifty tons. It made the journey on two flat cars, being too long for one car. The smaller palm seen at the left is twenty-five feet tall and weighed sixteen tons. Both are Jubæa spectabilis. In preparing these huge palms for removal, no effort was spared to prevent root disturbance. The largest palm was in a tub twenty feet square and twelve feet deep. It was, of course, built around the palm in the ground. Trenches were dug and the sides connected. Then a tunnel was run underneath and one plank of the bottom secured in position and blocked up. This process was repeated until the bottom was complete. Then an immense crate was built on to the box so as to enclose the whole palm, and numerous jack-screws lifted it to the ground level. The most delicate part of the job was lowering the structure to a horizontal position and loading it on the cars. Trouble developed en route, the crate when on the cars reaching such a height that it would not pass clear of the connecting rods of the superstructure of one of the railway bridges, but this was finally overcome. At Santa Cruz a temporary track was laid to the planting hole that had been prepared and the great structure was slowly tilted and worked into the hole and to an upright position, by means of a heavy house mover's windlass, heavy pulleys, etc. The crate and box were then removed and the palm guyed with wired rope. It is reported that it cost $3,000 to move this palm alone, and it may not be an exaggerated figure. The other large palm was handled in the same manner, only the box was smaller and the weight less.

The smaller trees and shrubs were in boxes suited to their size, care being taken in each case to secure such a generous ball of earth as to avoid any serious root disturbance. A gang of thirty men was employed in digging and boxing the plants. They were loaded on cars as rapidly as possible and sent on their way at once. No water was given until unloaded at Santa Cruz, when a soaking was in order.

In addition to the two large jubæas mentioned, there were many other palms of the sorts commonly planted in California, such as dracænas, bamboos in variety, English hollies, Italian cypresses, Irish yews, pittosporums, euonymuses, oranges, lemons, tree box, weeping elms, weeping mulberries, and a host of others. The entire contents of the conservatories and greenhouses in Redwood City were also transferred to Santa Cruz, where new glass structures had been erected to receive them.

The plans for this extraordinary plant moving were prepared by John McLaren, superintendent of Golden Gate park, San Francisco, and were executed under his direction by William James, Mr. Dingee's gardener.

So far none of the plants shows any signs of damage as the result of removal and it looks as though Mr. Dingee would realize his desire to secure for his new grounds in Santa Cruz the same mature effect that he had at his former residence in Redwood City. The new place contains but eight acres and there seems to be a great abundance of large subjects for this space, especially as the residence, yet to be built, will be a large one.

Partial View of Planting on the Dingee Place, Santa Cruz, Cal.

It will be interesting to note how well these plants, which have been long established in an interior valley, will adjust themselves to a situation almost within reach of the spray of the Pacific ocean.

LIME AND WOOD ASHES.

I can get any amount of air-slaked lime and also wood ashes that are partly mixed with coal ashes. Would it benefit the soil that is to be used in the benches this fall, if I apply any of the above now, and about how much ought to be used? The soil is somewhat sandy and was sowed in cowpeas last summer and turned down in the fall. C. D.

If these are passed through a screen to keep out the coarser cinders, they will prove valuable. Light, sandy ground requires less lime than clayey soils. It will be safe to scatter a little lime in your compost heap as you turn it over, although we prefer to apply it to the benches during the growing season. The ashes will, we think, do more good if also applied in the form of occasional surface dressings. We cannot advise you as to the quantity to apply, as so much depends on the nature of the soil, the crop to be grown and other conditions. Lime has a sweetening influence on land inclined to be sour and cannot be dispensed with. C. W.

A GOOD NEW CANNA.

King Humbert is such an improvement over all the other existing bronze-leaf sorts of cannas that every retail grower should include it in his list of varieties. For years, since 1894, Egandale has held practically the first place in that respect, for it not only had the bronze foliage, but fair sized, showy flowers, and was unsurpassed as a bedder. Many growers looked at any new varieties with suspicion, as it was hard to imagine anything to beat this old standby. But King Humbert does it in every respect. Here we have foliage of a deeper bronze shade, three times the size; flowers of a richer color, fully double the size of Egandale, and the plant has all the qualities a good bedder should have, which most of the extra large flowering sorts, especially the orchid-flowering ones, do not possess. If there is any room for criticism, it would be on the rather shy blooming qualities early in the season, but this is to a great extent overcome by using large stock for planting out.

We are growing about 10,000 cannas for spring sales. The plants are usually in 3½-inch pots for planting out, pot on pot, in the benches. It would be impossible to do this with King Humbert. To have this variety at its best the roots should be started by the end of February and kept growing until the plants are in 5-inch pots. By May 10, plants can be had thirty inches tall, with six or seven 18-inch leaves, ten inches wide, with two or three shoots surrounding the plants. This will require soil which had a good dose of bone meal, and watering with light doses of liquid cow manure, say once every two weeks after the plants have been potted. You could not get any of the other bedding varieties to such a size. It is not in them. What a show plants grown in that way make when first planted out! And even if your customer does complain about a scarcity of bloom during the early part of July, this is all forgotten long before the end of the season, for when they do bloom there is no other canna to equal them. The bed represents one solid mass of flowers, orange scarlet, surrounded by a border of bronze-colored, musa-like foliage.

To obtain the best results, the beds for the plants should be well prepared. It seems that overfeeding them is almost impossible. In fact, this holds good for all cannas. Common field culture does not do justice to any new variety. Well manured, deeply cultivated soil is necessary to produce large, glossy leaves and good flowers, and it would often avoid disappointment and bad feelings if the attention of a customer was called to these facts, whenever the beds are not in proper condition. #### JOSEPH VERVAENE.

George A. Strohlein, of Henry A. Dreer Co., Riverton, N. J., has received from Arthur De Smet, of Louis De Smet, Ghent, Belgium, a copy of La Tribune Horticole, published in Brussels under date of February 8, 1908, describing a fete given in honor of Joseph Vervane on the twenty-fifth anniversary of his introduction of Azalea Vervaneana. The following is a free translation from the French:

"The Syndicate Chamber of Belgian Horticulturists entertained on Sunday last, February 2, at Gand, at a handsome banquet commemorating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the introduction into commerce of Azalea Vervaneana and giving to its introducer, Joseph Vervane, a medal as a souvenir of this memorable event. The Tribune, wishing to add its high mark of esteem and admiration for this brilliant hybridizer, is happy to publish his portrait today. A short biographical sketch of the introducer and his creation will certainly give pleasure to numerous readers:

"Joseph Vervane, horticulturist, was born at Ledeberg, Gand, in 1833. He still enjoys, notwithstanding his advanced age, remarkable health. Descended from a line of horticulturists, the Vervanes, who were, in Belgium, the initiators of the culture of the Azalea Indica, he was the conscientious hybrid-izer to whom this species owes its best productions, such as Pharailde Mathilde, Perle de Ledeberg, Dame Mathilde, Perle de Belgic, Mme. Joseph Vervane, Rudolph Siegel, etc. Today we honor the elite of his productions, the Azalea Vervaneana. This variety originated from a fixed branch of Azalea Indica. Pharailde Mathilde was obtained by M. Vervane from a cross between Azalea Konigin der Weisse and Versicator.

"All the world knows Azalea Vervaneana sufficiently to dispense with a description from us. Suffice it to say that no variety unites in itself so high a degree of perfection as does this kind. Easy and vigorous growth, traveling readily long distances without injury to leaves or buds, responsive to hastening or retarding of flowering season, with a luxuriance without parallel, one is astonished at the scope that this variety has given to national horticulture. It is cultivated by the million—and by the million it has been exported to the four corners of the globe. Horticulturists have found it a fertile source of prosperity. Horticulture owes to this variety much of its commercial expansion. It must be said to the honor of M. Vervane that when putting this novelty on the market he had in view only the advancement of our industry. He sold the plant honestly after he had fully tested it; not at a fancy price for his own personal aggrandizement, but at a price within the reach of all, permitting its rapid multiplication and its vigorous pushing to a conquest of the world.

"It is also by the Azalea Pharailde Mathilde that Joseph Vervane produced some years ago by a fixed branch the Azalea Vervaneana alba, which is believed to surpass all other white varieties and may in the future surpass even Vervaneana itself. The same hybridizer combining his judicious and successful work, is now making experiments, the result of which he proposes to exhibit at the approaching centennial exposition at Gand. We will close by saying that the name of Joseph Vervane will be inseparable from the horticultural history of our century, and that the Azalea Vervaneana will bequeath his name to posterity."

I assume that by "fixed branch" is meant what we would call sport.

TROUBLE WITH GERANIUMS.

Please give me some idea as to how I can know when the soil is too wet for geraniums. The reason I ask this is, I grow about 10,000 each year and those I put in flowering pots in the fall go through the winter in good shape, as also do those in 2½-inch pots until I put them in 3½-inch pots, and then, when cold weather comes, the leaves turn red and the young roots rot. They are watered once or twice a week, according to the amount of sunshine, and are in strong light. They are neither drawn nor spindly. The S. A. Nutt is always first to turn. The most of them are on solid beds twelve inches above the walk, and when a strong gale is blowing there seems to be a cold draught going over the plants. The temperature of the houses is 50 degrees. If the plants are in the bed instead of pots, they grow and the draught does not seem to hurt them at all. Only those in pots seem to suffer. Do you think the draught would make the soil too cold and cause the roots to rot? When I used to heat with flues I had all raised benches, and in some corners the ground in the pots would freeze sometimes, but it never hurt them, as it does since I have hot water. Where do you think the fault lies, with me or the cold wind, or the draught, or the bed, or what?

R. A. B.

There is no doubt at all that your geraniums would do much better in winter on raised benches, and if your hot water pipes, or even part of them, were underneath, to furnish a little bottom heat, all the better. If there is such a draught as you speak of, it must be injurious to your plants. Then, again, geraniums on a solid bed near the ground will not dry out as on raised benches, and require more careful watering. We suppose you have not used any strong chemical fertilizers in your compost. These often cause a heavy loss. An overdose of bone has ruined many a promising lot of geraniums. Growers too often act on the assumption that if a little is good, a larger lot will be even better, the results usually being disastrous.

After repotting your geraniums, it would be well not to water at all for a couple of days. Then give a soaking and allow them to dry out thoroughly before watering again. They would be much better on the dry side until the sides of the pots contain plenty of feeding roots. A temperature of 50 degrees is all right, and with careful watering and ventilating, proper soil and an absence of cold draughts, you should not have had any trouble, even on a bed only a foot above the ground. We think you would do much better by growing them on raised benches another year. The plants will be warmer than near the ground, and will grow stockier and be in every way more satisfactory.

THE PRIVATE GARDENER.

[A synopsis of a paper by Robert Craig, of Philadelphia, read before the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, February 29, 1908.]

I choose the subject because I conceive that it is one of more importance than is generally assigned to it and that the private gardener is likely to play a part of continually growing importance in American life. His influence on the future of horticulture is powerful for good or for evil. If he be a capable, energetic and honest man, he will do such work as will make his employer a patron of gardening, and if he be ignorant, careless and dishonest he will not only ruin himself, but will damage the cause he misrepresents. Allow me to recite a couple of instances occurring in my own neighborhood which illustrate this point:

Success Stimulates Interest.

I was well acquainted with a wealthy gentleman who built new greenhouses and started to improve the grounds surrounding his fine mansion. He was fortunate in securing a fine English gardener, newly arrived in this country; his place rapidly improved under the new gardener's care and after two years' work, when the owner saw he was getting good results, he became greatly interested, and invested freely large sums to carry on the improvements. Everything prospered and was a source of great pleasure to the owner and his friends, when suddenly the good gardener was stricken with an incurable disease and had to give up work. The place was then put in charge of his first assistant, a young man about 26 years old, who was given a fine opportunity to make a name for himself, but he could not stand even a little prosperity; and during a spree, an accident to the boilers resulted in the entire stock of plants being frozen. The owner, who had plenty of money to spend in gratifying his tastes, lost all interest in gardening and became a liberal patron of other fine arts. His collection of paintings and sculpture are known far and wide, but the greenhouses are empty, the garden neglected, and it is not likely the owner's interest in these will ever be revived.

Another instance coming under my immediate observation interested me still more. One of the wealthiest men in the neighborhood of Philadelphia built one of the finest mansions in the state, employed the highest talent in landscape gardening and in a couple of years had the new place greatly improved. He employed a young German gardener who had previously at a salary of only $60 per month made a good name for himself; gave him entire charge, and he worked with such intelligence, industry and honesty, that the employer built for him additional ranges of glass at a cost of $50,000, and allows him to spend annually a large sum in improving the place. Only last summer he took a trip to Europe at his employer's expense, with power to purchase such rare plants as he might select. His salary is now quite satisfactory to him. Oh, but you say, this was a rare case. Perhaps it was, but I am sure at the rate wealth is increasing in this country the number of such places will steadily increase. I like to quote Lord Bacon on this point: "When ages grow to civility and elegance men come to build stately, sooner than to garden finely, as if gardening were the greater perfection."

Robert Craig.

The Gardener's Education.

The problem of how a gardener should set about preparing himself for his life work is, in this country, a serious one. In the older countries of Europe, opportunities to acquire a thorough knowledge of all departments are plentiful. There are so many estates on which the grounds are admirably planned and planted, and where there are numerous houses adapted for propagating and growing everything for the garden, that a man may get a thorough knowledge of gardening in all branches; and there are many commercial places which carry on all lines and where boys may go and learn the business as they grow to manhood. There are only a few such commercial places in America. In this country almost all the trade establishments cultivate specialties, as roses, carnations or palms. Nearly all of our good, all-around gardeners get their training abroad, and it is well for any young man who can get a chance to learn gardening under such a man, either on a large private place or in a park.

Some of our colleges now have facilities for teaching gardening. I wish that all of the colleges would follow the example of Cornell, where they have six greenhouses in which students may gain a practical knowledge of plant growth, learn how to prepare soil and manure, and have opportunity to gain a general knowledge of advanced gardening. Many of the colleges have now a course in forestry, and I understand that young men getting diplomas, if otherwise fitted, can readily procure employment at fair salaries. It seems to me that the time is now ripe for all the leading colleges to build ranges of glass and have courses in practical horticulture. Graduates from these classes would have an advantage over uneducated men in securing the best positions. The recent establishment of classes in landscape gardening by the Florists' Club of Boston is of great value to those near enough to take advantage, and is an example for all similar institutions everywhere to imitate.

Be a Reader.

To the gardener who wants to improve himself, books are a paramount necessity. Nicholson's "Dictionary of Gardening" and Bailey's "Cyclopedia of American Horticulture" should be in the possession of every gardener; they describe nearly every plant in cultivation and their cultural notes are of great value. I will not attempt naming all the good books, but cannot refrain from mentioning Jenkin's "Art of Propagation and Improvement of Cultivated Plants;" Taft's "Greenhouse Construction;" Hunt's "How to Grow Cut Flowers;" Henderson's "Practical Floriculture;" Falconer's "Mushrooms;" Ellwanger and Reynolds' "Hole on Roses;" Downing's "Fruits and Fruit Trees;" Peter Henderson's "Gardening for Profit;" Mrs. Van Rensselaer's "Art Out of Doors;" "The Principles of the Harmony and Contrast of Colors," by M. E. Chevreul; Herrington and Smith on "Chystanthemums."

Cultivate a love for books; it is a habit that grows by indulgence. Subscribe for one or more of the trade papers and get your names on the lists of the agricultural stations so as to get up-to-date information, the results of the latest experiments along all lines. The seedsmen's catalogues are great educational factors; I know of no greater improvement horticulturally than in the character and contents of these valuable publications.

Every garden may be made more interesting by excelling in some specialty. Every gardener should have a hobby. By saving your own seed, carefully selecting, year after year, the finest, it is astonishing how you can improve the varieties in any species. You will find in a few years your constant and careful pursuit of your hobby will result in making you, and the place you represent, more or less famous. As Emerson says, "If you make shoes better than anyone else you will have a path beaten to your cottage door."

How New Varieties Come.

It is profoundly interesting to study how new varieties come. Nature works, often we know not how, in bringing forth new varieties. The influence of heredity undoubtedly prevails to some extent and instances are not wanting to show that it does. Let me give you just one in my own experience. Three years ago we made a number of crosses in carnations, using Harlowarden as one of the parents. You will recollect that this sort had a long, desirable stem and we noticed that about one-fifth of these seedlings had this Harlowarden stem, but there were characteristics developed in a number of seedlings which had no visible connection with either of the parents. Sometimes, however, the influence of both parents can be distinctly traced. Many of you will recollect the introduction of the Daybreak carnation, a charming variety which had not many stems, but these were long and stiff and every shoot produced a flower. About the same time was introduced Tidal Wave, which produced many stems, but lacking in length. The crossing of these two varieties produced the famous Lawson, which inherited the good points of both varieties. Among the seedlings with Lawson blood has been found Enchantress, which I think has more good qualities than any other variety, and following along this line has resulted in producing a free blooming, vigorous type which has made Mr. Fisher famous.

The results of Mr. Walsh's work in roses of the Wichuraiana type are little short of marvelous; the man who does such things is a public benefactor.

But, while man can do something in breeding from types, nature is always at work and often produces, we know not how, valuable breaks in seedlings or sports, which are frequently lost because the gardener fails to recognize their merits, and propagate and perpetuate them. Private gardeners have done much in the past to preserve and propagate good new things and should be ever on the alert to take advantage of any opportunities along this line which kind nature may afford.

Importance of Vegetables.

One of the main branches of work for the private gardener is the growing of vegetables. There should be an abundance of vegetables for spring, summer and fall and where the facilities exist, in the winter also. George Eliot says: "No man can be wise on an empty mums."

good dinner lubricates business." No dinner is complete without fresh vegetables, and many of the finest, most luscious and delicately flavored cannot be purchased in the markets, because they do not pay to grow commercially. If you can furnish your employer a regular supply of these dainties, you will find yourself in close touch with him and he is likely to help you in any of your plans.

Industry and Courage.

Now, a few words on the importance of industry. From the earliest times, the great men have extolled the value of industry. "Go to the ant, thou slug-gard, consider her ways, and be wise" has served for the text of many a powerful sermon. The expression that "genius is only an infinite capacity for work" has been endorsed by many thinkers. Napoleon said: "I have never found the limit of my capacity for work." In short, the men who have made their mark in the world have been at a loss for words to express themselves strongly enough on the subject. Don't be afraid of work and don't forget that "folks who never do more than they are paid for, never get paid for more than they do." Let not the amount of pay be your main consideration; rather see how much and how well you can do the work. The real reward that life holds out for work is the increased capacity to do more and better work, and consequently greater satisfaction and enjoyment. The man who wants an indolent life is not fitted for a gardener.

Many good men fail to do their best for want of courage and faith in themselves, and from lack of energy and ambition; there are not so many failures from want of capacity. Herrick says: "The great man is not so great as folks think, nor the stupid man so stupid as he seems."

The late Peter Henderson, a great gardener, close observer and successful business man, often said that he did not think there was so much difference in the mental capacity of men as in their courage, ambition and industry. Have faith in yourselves and loyalty to your employer. I am fond of the saying of Fra Elbertus: "If put to the point, an ounce of loyalty is worth a pound of cleverness." Don't be afraid to undertake all the time bigger things; your ability will grow in your earnest attempts to accomplish; and don't be afraid of manual labor if occasion require; it will not lessen, but increase your mental power. A stiffening and strengthening of the spinal column begets no weakness of the mind: "A sound mind in a sound body." The advantage of outdoor exercise is recognized everywhere. The orator in the English parliament exclaimed: "The battlefields of England were won on the cricket fields of Eton," and there was as much force in the rejoinder of the Irish member: "They were won on the bogs of Ireland."

Compensation for Gardeners.

The problem of compensation for gardeners is an interesting one. Most gardeners think it is a poorly paid work, and perhaps it is, considering how much has to be learned. I think, however, the money reward rests largely with the individual. There can be nothing like a uniform scale of wages. I had, for instance, paid my foreman about $1,200 a year, but I must say that one to whom I paid $2,000 per annum was the most profitable one to me.

I think, on the whole, the outlook for first-class gardeners is good. Never in the history of nations has wealth increased so fast as in the United States during the last quarter of a century, and a majority of the wealthy men will, in the future, I venture to say, find their highest pleasure in developing their gardens and country estates. Gardening is the most healthful of all occupations; it is one of the fine arts. Ruskin has defined fine art as any occupation in which the head, hand and heart work together. I cannot see why the gardener cannot take as much pleasure as the owner. "He who admires is the real possessor." "There is no ancient gentlemen, but gardeners."

Give fools their gold and knaves their power,
Let fortune's bubble rise and fall;
Who sows a field, or trains a flower,
Or plants a tree, is more than all.

A MONTH IN EUROPE.

Those who attended the S. A. F. convention at Philadelphia last August will recall, as one of the pleasant features of that occasion, the travel lecture by J. Otto Thilow, secretary of the Henry A. Dreer corporation, who told of his tour of the Yellowstone and illustrated his story with excellent lantern slides. The same speaker entertained the Florists' Club of Philadelphia at its meeting, March 3, with an account of the month's trip of himself and Jacob D. Eisele, of his firm, in Europe last autumn. Of things horticultural he said:

"To the horticulturist there is much of interest, especially so when it appears that the conditions seem to be so favorable for the development of plants, some of which we try to bring under subjection to our varying conditions, to which they unwillingly yield. The methods of cultivation followed in the production of plants are the same methods which have been applied for many years, or even decades, with but few variations. We have either not yet learned how to do it, or the system, coupled with the conditions, will remain where it is.

Results of Years.

"This much, however, can be said of our European brother horticulturist: His training is much more thorough; his early association with plant life, which in some degree is tutored in his home, stirs a more intense love for the art, and an untiring interest in the vocation. Men and women in the homes of city and country regard the most humble domicile incomplete for themselves and families without plants, flowers or shrubbery under their own personal care. This in-born love for the adornment of the home has been handed down to posterity, so that it has become a part of the nature of children to busy themselves with the care of plants. A much greater impetus to the advancement of horticulture is given by the personal interest of the nobility and the people of means in that they are surrounded with the best taste in the horticultural art, and perpetuate the estates of their ancestors with even more elaborate outlay and show, and do much by personal contribution to perpetuate the interest among those who are engaged in the pursuit of horticulture as a business.

Kew and Covent Garden.

"Having already determined upon a visit to the pride of England's horticultural school—Kew Gardens—our desire was intensified by what had already been enjoyed. Starting from Charing Cross Sub, we were soon at Kew Gardens, which well deserves the name of a perfect Eden in good order. The botanical department is of more than ordinary interest in that it is attractive and under a splendid system and care. Many beds were planted with such stock as we could never venture a trial, and were there in full glory. The roses and dahlias were clothed with a wealth of bloom, and a promise of more. The arrangements for studying trees and shrubs—in fact, all plants—were minutely confined to proper labeling, which even to the novice is an evidence that there is need of system and classification in horticulture.

"An early start was made the next morning for the renowned Covent Garden to watch and study the trend of commerce in plants and flowers. Much is done in a short time and at an early hour. At this time, September 26, cut chrysanthemums were in abundance, with the almost glut of roses cut from field-grown plants, and hardy asters (Michaelmas daisies) in masses of color. The fruit and vegetable markets were equally active, and afforded much interest.

Belgium.

"The cities of Ghent and Bruges are highly interesting in horticulture—the home of the azalea and bay, the fields of tuberous begonias, and glass areas of palms. Prominently in all thoroughfares is seen the ever faithful and unpaid laborer, the dog, hitched beneath the hand carts, tugging and helping the load onward; the wooden shoe in evidence on the children in the city, and the laborers in the fields. Ghent is an active city of 160,000 inhabitants, with many places of historic interest. Bruges, one hour's train ride east, is also interesting and quaint. The impression left by this short sojourn, the kind attention and courtesy of our Belgian friends, are not to be forgotten.

Erfurt.

"Nearing the Saxon country gave me a slight inspiration, it being the land of my father's pride, and which I had for the first time the pleasure to look upon.

"The city of Erfurt needs no minute description, as it is known well to the horticulturists the world over. The fostering of the seed growing industry identifies this ancient German city with the whole world. All that could be done to cover the ground in the forty-eight hours' stay was most courteously afforded. An auto trip through Gotha, Coburg, Friedrichsroda and to the Thuringian forest was sufficient evidence that motoring is a delightful pastime, because of the splendid roads and the freedom accorded the autoist. The Germans might well point with pride to the well kept forests, of which nearly 35,000,000 acres are in the German Empire alone, thirty-two per cent belonging to the state. Apparently not a misshapen tree is to be seen from the roads. This auto tour covered 110 miles in three hours, returning to Erfurt in the evening. Sixty minutes to the hour was hardly enough for so strenuous a time as was put in with these big hearted people."

AS OTHERS SEE US.

The Horticultural Advertiser (England) has this to say:

"American carnationists have been having high old times of late, and, considering that America, as a nation, is many years behind this country in things horticultural, it is amazing how enthusiastically American florists rally to the annual conventions promoted by the Society of American Florists, American Rose Society and American Carnation Society.

"As far as I am aware, there is nothing run in this country on similar lines.

"The various horticultural societies hold their annual meetings, shows and dinners, but the American trade societies seem to run the whole lot combined, spreading the proceedings over several days. Frantic enthusiasm seems to pervade the meetings, the various speeches and papers given are listened to with every attention, while the shows attract everybody who likes to see florists' art in its highest form.

"The various trade journals, like our own, devote themselves to the cause, only at much greater length. Every florist and grower for market can read practically word for word what has been said at the conventions, whilst photographic illustrations enable those not present to become acquainted with every important item exhibited, together with the various gentlemen who control the destinies of the different societies.

"From an outsider's point of view, it would appear that there is a deal of difference between horticultural England and horticultural America. At home, the amateur rules the roost; in America the tradesman holds things in the palm of his hand."

BEDDING PLANTS.

I have a nice lawn in front of my greenhouses and would like to know what flowers to plant to make a good showing to the public, and how to arrange them. I have Crimson and Baby Rambler roses, yellow and red cannas, colcus of red and yellow colors, white candytuft, periwinkle and dwarf cockscomb, and I wish also to plant some scarlet sage. Now, will you please tell me how to arrange them when planting in groups? I have round beds to plant in. Would you recommend any of the above varieties planted in one bed? If so, please tell me what to plant in the center of the bed and what variety and color next, etc., to the border of the bed. If you know of any variety of flower that would be better than those named, please give it.
H. M.

A round bed of cannas of one solid color, either red or yellow, looks well. A band of yellow around red, or of red around yellow, makes a little variation. By using a dwarf variety, like Express, Crimson Bedder or Queen Charlotte, as an edging, there would be no need of any other plants for bordering. We think a solid bed of one color preferable to any mixture.

Geraniums cannot well be omitted from any list of flowering bedding plants. Jean Viand, S. A. Nutt, Alphonse Ricard and La Favorite are a few good sorts. The variegated Mme. Salleroy makes a nice bordering if you care for such. Cockscombs are stiff for bedding and you would do much better by planting groups or beds of such persistent blooming annuals as petunias, verbenas or even nasturtiums. Scarlet salvia makes a brilliant show in clumps. Its high color should be kept on the sides of the garden you are to plant and not near the center.

For a large round bed try a musa or castor oil plant in the center; then some of the Italian cannas, such as King Humbert or Mrs. Kate Gray, putting some of the French cannas in front of them. A row of Caladium esculentum is preferred by some, but Pennisetum longistylum looks well. If you want some dark-colored foliage, use such cannas as Shenandoah or Robusta, growing six feet or more in height, next to your centerpiece. Vinca rosea and V. alba flower all summer and are very satisfactory bedders.

Among roses, in addition to the Baby Rambler, Clothilde Soupert, Hermosa, Gruss an Teplitz and Maman Cochet are all continuous bloomers.

Such coleuses as Verschaffeltii and Golden Bedder may be used as edgings to canna beds or may be planted in separate beds, making an edging of one color and the balance of the bed another shade. You will not find candytuft a continuous bloomer. The fibrous-rooted begonias, such as Vernon and Erfordii; lantanas, ageratums and heliotropes can all be recommended. In planting, keep the high colors by themselves and do not make the mistake of using combinations of pink and scarlet. As a rule, you will find beds of one variety more effective than mixtures.

PHLOXES AT BAR HARBOR.

Phlox paniculata has of late gained wonderfully in public favor. It is bound to continue doing so, as the knowledge of cultural requirements increases and the produce of that abundance of large, erect-borne panicles, carried on strong shoots, becomes the general rule. There is no doubt that the introduction of a considerable number of meritorious novelties, in desirable colors and shades, has greatly stimulated the demand for hardy phloxes. For rich floral display on the herbaceous border they are unsurpassed.

Phloxes can be advantageously grouped together by themselves, to help in brightening up the appearance of both the small front lawn and the little backyard. For gay, massive color effect on the terraces of the most pretentious formal garden, Phlox paniculata is today almost indispensable.

Ultimate satisfactory results in all instances depend, however, to a large extent on the preparation of the ground and the proper care of the plants after setting out. It is well to say that phloxes, like many other hardy herbaceous plants, thrive in any ordinary garden soil, but only under the condition that the garden owner, private gardener, landscape architect, or whoever plants the stock, realizes that this garden soil is to be enriched first. Phloxes are to remain in their places undisturbed for from three to four years, and as ultimate results the purchaser invariably demands strong, robust growth, healthy foliage, large, well built panicles, bright, clear colors and good sized individual flowers. The purchaser is nowhere more outspoken in his desire for perfection than in our northeastern summer resorts. These are urgent reasons for starting with a liberal supply of nourishment, within easy reach of the roots.

To the great majority of cottage dwellers the beautiful Maine summer seems incomplete without the gay, cheerful array of perennials and annuals near their homes, and the hardy phlox is a very prominent factor in those arrays. Along the cliff-bound, woody northern Atlantic coast line, cultivated garden soil is rather a scarce article. What we have to depend on is frequently the virgin soil of the native woodland. Though mostly rough and very stony, it is not necessarily always poor. For hardy perennials in general, and phloxes especially, the raw soil of the woods was nevertheless seldom a means to success. Still, when such soil has been properly enriched and cultivated, conditions usually change at once. Further experiences have shown that the beneficent influences of the sea were a great advantage. Nowhere within this locality, at present, are the floricultural possibilities more closely studied than on Mount Desert Island. Bar Harbor, as a leading social rendezvous of a great portion of our wealthy classes, is rapidly becoming a horticultural center of the north. Since it depends mainly on the comparatively short midsummer season, the hardy perennial, for obvious reasons, is bound to play a most important role in its annual displays.

To give the reader some idea of the prominence of hardy phloxes in Bar Harbor, I refer to our two illustrations, showing the phlox fields of the Mount Desert Nurseries as they appeared last summer. In the general evolution of local floriculture this firm has been in the past, and will be in the future, to a large extent, the inspiring factor. It was from the start the fixed opinion of George R. Dorr, the owner of "The Nurseries," that the very best is just good enough for Bar Harbor. This opinion is shared by William Miller, the general manager, who for many years has been carefully and persistently selecting, acclimatizing and studying perennials and who has also made the Mount Desert Nurseries' phlox collections the center of attraction for the multitudes of visitors at this great summer resort.

It is true that extraordinary displays of this nature are first and last the means employed by progressive business firms to attract attention and, in consequence, increase their trade. Still, if we consider Bar Harbor as a leading social center of national character, the business-augmenting influence of such exhibitions assumes a wider scope. As an effort to arouse general interest in hardy phloxes it becomes horticultural pioneering, for of its stimulating effect on trade the craft at large is bound to be at last the beneficiary. RICHARD ROTHE.

THE DEATH ROLL.

Frank Cummings, Sr.

Frank Cummings, Sr., of the Frank Cummings Bulb & Plant Co., died at his home in Meridian, Miss., on the morning of February 23, aged 83 years. Death was caused by grippe, developing into pneumonia. He passed away after an illness of only ten days. Mr. Cummings was born near Montreal, Canada, of French parents. He emigrated to St. Albans, Vt., when about 16 years old, and from St. Albans he went to Albany, N. Y., where he resided for forty-four years. About seven years ago he went to Meridian, Miss., to engage with his son, W. W. Cummings, in growing cannas and other stock, the business being conducted under the firm name of Frank Cummings, Sr. In 1905 the firm name was changed to Frank Cummings Bulb & Plant Co., taking in his two grandsons, F. B. Cummings and W. G. Cummings. There will be no change in the title of the firm, or in the policy.

F. C. Miller.

It was with sincere regret that the friends and customers of the firm of Miller & Sons, of Bracondale, Ont., heard of the death of the founder and head of the firm, Frederick Christopher Miller. He was sick only about five weeks, and but few of the intimate friends knew that his illness was serious.

Mr. Miller was born May 8, 1835, at Portsmouth, England. He was married December 25, 1864, to Miss Ellen Slade, of the same place. Mr. and Mrs. Miller came to Canada in 1873, when Mr. Miller, who had taken up the profession of teaching, was the first teacher in the log school of Seaton village. About sixteen years ago he started in the vegetable growing business in Bracondale, which he carried on quite extensively. From that he gradually drifted into the growing of cut flowers and plants. The firm has a continental reputation as growers of mums and Easter lilies and was the originator of the well-known mum, Timothy Eaton, as well as several other varieties which are probably not so well known.

A family of eleven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Miller, of whom seven survive: Frederick H. and Edwin T., connected with the firm; Bernhard W., who has a place of his own in Bracondale; Mrs. Geo. Anderson, of Downsview; Mrs. H. Duncan, of Fairbank; Mrs. F. Bakewell, of Toronto, and Miss May, at home. Mrs. Tilley, Dundas, is the only sister in this country.

He was a member of these fraternal, social and business organizations: York Lodge and Stanley Lodge, A. F. & A. M.; St. Patrick's Chapter, Albany Club, L. O. L.; Board of Trade, Liederkrantz and I. O. F. D. J.

Lewis D. Robinson.

L. D. Robinson died at Springfield, Mass., February 26, from heart failure following a long siege of the grippe. The funeral took place February 28. The floral offerings were many and very choice.

Mr. Robinson was a veteran of the civil war and originally engaged in the business of picture framing, later combining it with our profession and building up a profitable enterprise, in which he has been ably assisted by his son, Lewis D., Jr., who will continue the business. In addition to taking a leading part in local politics, Mr. Robinson was a steward of one of the leading churches and a member of several secret orders. He was also one of the directors of the Hampden County Horticultural Society and for many years treasurer of the Amateur Horticultural Society of Springfield. M.

Robert J. Allan.

Robert J. Allan, a well-known gardener at Newport, R. I., passed away at the Newport hospital, Monday morning, February 24, after a brief illness. Robert J. Allan was in recent years in charge of several private estates in Newport. Up to the time of his sudden illness, which terminated fatally, he gave every indication of being in the best of health, and so sudden a call was a great shock to his relatives and many friends. He left a widow and one brother, William Allan.

Henry F. Rauss.

Henry F. Rauss, a member of the Detroit Florists' Club and for some time foreman of a section of the greenhouses at Belle Isle, Detroit, died February 26, after a long illness. A large broken column showed the deep sympathy of his fellows at Belle Isle. The club also sent a large design. Mr. Rauss was related to the Breitmeyers by marriage. Miss Clara Rauss, employed by John Breitmeyer's Sons, is a daughter. S.

SYLVANIA, O.—The Cushman Gladiolus Co. shipped a carload of gladiolus bulbs to Chicago this week and report business unusually good.

BUTTE, MONT.—A. C. Wilhelm, of the Butte Floral Co., says business is quite fair considering that the mines are closed and that one bank has failed.

OSKALOOSA, IA.—The Kemble Floral Co. has erected an additional greenhouse at the south side of the other property, besides making a good many repairs and alterations.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

INCORPORATED BY ACT OF CONGRESS MARCH 4, '01

Officers for 1908: President, F. H. Traendly, New York; vice-president, George W. McClure, Buffalo; secretary pro tem., Willis N. Rudd, Morgan Park, Ill.; treasurer, H. B. Beatty, Pittsburg.

Annual convention, Niagara Falls, August 18 to 21, 1908.

First National Flower Show, Chicago, November 9 to 15, 1908; W. F. Kasting, Buffalo, chairman.

LENT is no longer a period of sackcloth and ashes and has little effect on the florists' business.

OLD Mr. Ground Hog certainly hit it right this year, but his reappearance after his six weeks' retirement is due in the next ten days.

A GARDENER who is in a position to speak with authority says: "Every florist who has use for fine fall flowers should try the Lady Lenox cosmos."

HIGH water, it is reported, has made it difficult for the packers to get at the wild smilax in the southern woods and created something of a shortage for the moment.

If you have some little lot of stock you would like to move, offer it in a classified advertisement in the REVIEW. Depend upon it, some one, somewhere, wants just the plants you do not need.

ENCHANTRESS will not be planted so heavily another season, for during the recent period of heavy production of carnations the fact that this variety has been overdone this season has been very apparent.

SECRETARY MAURICE FULD reports that the membership of the New England Dahlia Society is now 250 and gives credit for it to the Dahlia News. The credit rather should go to the editor of the News, who is Secretary Fuld.

It is interesting to read, in a New York gardening magazine, that "no man ever became a millionaire in the florists' business," but really the writer should take a trip to Chicago and look around a bit; it might convince him that he didn't put it quite right.

HOLLYHOCKS are liable to rust if grown in too high a temperature during winter and early spring and then planted out without being hardened. Much the better way with hollyhocks is to put them in coldframes whenever they are established in pots or flats. So much the better, if they were grown in frames all through the winter.

Results bring advertising.
The REVIEW brings results.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Executive Committee Meeting.

A meeting of the executive board of the S. A. F. is called by order of President Traendly, to be held at the Prospect House, Niagara Falls, N. Y., at 9 a. m. March 23. The same is to continue March 24 in case the business affairs of the association are not concluded previously.

W. N. RUDD, Sec'y.

National Flower Show.

W. Wells, of Merstham, England, offers for the national flower show in November next, a gold, a silver and a bronze medal for six blooms of Chrysanthemum W. M. Moir, to be shown on stems thirty inches long.

Notice of this offer having arrived too late to be included in the first edition of the premium list, it is hereby given.

W. N. RUDD, Chairman.

NEW KIND OF INSURANCE.

If there are any florists who are adding nothing to their glass this season, there surely is not one who has not heard that glass is cheaper at present than in many years. The Pittsburg Plate Glass Co. says that one of the noticeable effects has been that a large number of growers are buying quantities in excess of what they will need this year, calling it insurance. One large grower, who is not building much this year, has bought the glass for a big range he plans to build next season, figuring that glass is not likely to be any cheaper next spring than it is now. Many others have bought as much as they will naturally need for a year or two for the ordinary replacement of breakage, and several have bought and are storing anywhere from 100 boxes to a carload, simply to have it on hand in case of a hail storm, figuring that it is worth the interest on the money to have the means of quick repairs on the place, to say nothing of the possibility of being caught in need of the glass with the market much higher than at present.

The popular greenhouse sizes are now to be bought about twenty-five per cent cheaper than last year. How long the market will remain at its present level is problematical. Well posted jobbers of window glass say the present output of hand-blown glass is much less than usual, not over seventy per cent of the full capacity of the factories. The production of machine-made glass is no greater than last year, and there is a possibility of considerably higher prices before autumn.

HELP WANTED.

I tell you what, it pays to put an advertisement in the REVIEW if you want a man. I have had so many applications for the job I have to offer that I hardly know which one to choose. I received eighty-one letters in answer to my advertisement, so please do not put it in again.

—EDWARD TATRO.

OLEAN, N. Y.—Mrs. F. H. Johnson says that the field for the sale of funeral designs and loose cut flowers is not overdone here, although there are four florists in the trade.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The market was decidedly quiet last week, and it does not start off much better this week, but the wholesalers are feeling easier about it. Many of them have written their customers in the country to inquire what has become of the orders, and in return have been informed that the country florists are doing a first-rate business, generally as good as a year ago, but that local crops are so heavy that for the time being the home supply is adequate and there is no need to draw on the Chicago market except for special items. This indicates to the wholesalers that the shipping business will return in full force as soon as the present heavy crops pass off.

It is beginning to be the general opinion that the present crop of carnations is the annual spring crop, somewhat ahead of time, and that it will, as usual, be followed by a period of much lighter production. At this season there can be no scarcity, but a considerable reduction in the supply of carnations will put much new life in the market. The report is that just now the crop of carnations is exceedingly heavy almost everywhere in the country. Prices in Chicago last week were the lowest of the season, and much lower than ever before in February. Indeed, March starts with prices far below the normal. There are stories of clean-ups at 5 cents per bunch, but the market really is not so bad as that. The price has been from 60 cents to $3, it usually being possible to clean out accumulations at $10 per thousand if the stock was not held too long. There is a little better feeling this week.

The rose market has weakened perceptibly since last report and there are growers who predict that in a short time the rose market will be in as bad a state as that which has marked the carnation department in the last three weeks. Beauties still are short of the demand, but there is an abundance of each of the other varieties. Quality leaves nothing to be desired.

Bulbous stock does not move any better than it has and Easter lilies and callas have weakened. Violets continue practically unsalable except at what the Greeks will give in a time of oversupply. Sweet peas are beginning to come in heavily and prices have gone down a couple of notches. The good stock sells quickly.

Asparagus bunches are in request and other greenhouse greens have advanced slightly in price as a result of shortening supply. Some of the houses are marking ferns up to $2.50. There are predictions of scarcity before Decoration day.

this year, as against twenty-eight last year, and with a decided increase in the production of cut flowers, the average house in this market did not show as large a volume of sales as in 1907. The exceptions were the few houses that had larger cuts of roses than a year ago. The rose, including the Beauty, was about the only flower for which there was a sale that was fair to good all through the month. Of carnations there never were so many in February, nor were prices ever so low. One of the best growers, whose stock last February brought from 3 cents to 5 cents, this year received from 1 cent to 3 cents, with an average below 2 cents because a large part of his stock was Enchantress, the variety that was most overplentiful and which this February did not bring as good average prices as the best grades of dark pink, which was just the reverse of other years. Violets, too, have been a steady glut, because of increased shipments from New York. The supply of bulbous stock has not been greater than in other years, but prices have never been so low.

Take it all in all, the wholesaler and the grower who took in as much money as in February, 1907, should count himself fortunate. A few did better than that, but the majority fell behind.

The factors that made for the increased supply in the wholesale market made for a better margin of profit for the retailers. Some of the latter report a better month than a year ago, but they are the ones with the medium class of trade. As a rule, the big jobs were missed by the leading retailers, and the numbers of factory hands that are idle made slow business for those who look to the laboring classes for their trade.

February Weather.

The mean temperature in February was only 1 degree higher than normal, and 1 degree above last year, but in other respects the month was unusual. The rainfall was nearly four times what it was a year ago, being 3.78 inches, and the snowfall double last year's, or 19.8 inches. The heating of greenhouses also was rendered more difficult by the wind averaging all through the month twenty per cent stronger than in February, 1907. There were seven clear days as against six in 1907, five partly cloudy as against fourteen, and seventeen on which the sun did not shine as against eight in 1907.

Peter Reinberg has just recorded the transfer of two and three-quarters acres of land on Robey street, just north of his range of houses on the east side of that thoroughfare. He bought the property some time ago of Henry Miller for $10,000.

Carl N. Thomas, of the A. L. Randall Co., says it looks to him as though conditions were shaping themselves for a comparative shortage of stock for Easter. John Poehlmann says he thinks carnations will be in much lighter crop in a few days and E. C. Amling says that one of his growers, who is always a little ahead of the others with his crop, reports the end of the present heavy cut in sight.

Phil Schupp, at J. A. Budlong's, says they had a most satisfactory run of New Orleans shipping for the Mardi Gras.

Kennicott Bros. Co. has been receiving outdoor jonquils from Mississippi since the last days of February. Mr. Pieser says, however, that there is practically no market for them this year, indoor bulbous stock being so cheap.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. has begun to cut antirrhinum, pink and white, of splendid quality.

Mrs. C. W. McKellar, with a friend, Miss Indereiden, is visiting U. J. Virgin and family at New Orleans this week. After a visit to Mrs. McKellar's mother in Texas, they intend going to New York by steamer.

Vaughan & Sperry say that while the outside buyers are not needing many cut flowers just now, they are ordering fertilizers, cuttings and spring bulbs in good quantity.

Dominick Freres, formerly with Wittbold's, is now with J. J. Kruchten.

E. C. Amling returned March 1 from a visit of six weeks in southern California. He says he was particularly impressed with the opportunities there for growing cut flowers under glass. He says the retail prices in Los Angeles are higher than in Chicago and apparently there are not enough indoor flowers. Al-

Wieter Bros. are beginning to get action on their next crop of Beauties and at the same time are beginning to plan replanting some of their Beauty houses, to get a summer crop.

Stollery Bros. say that February business with them was better than a year ago, although January fell a little behind. They say it is a great deal easier to sell a plant at the store than it is to sell one where the customer has all the stock in the greenhouses to look over before making a selection, and they now do little retail business at the greenhouses.

George Reinberg appears to be well satisfied with the results of his investment in orchids. The returns did not begin to really come in until about January 1.

Emma Raisek, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stephan Raisek, 1553 Ogden avenue, is a leap year girl. She is sixteen years old and there was a celebration of her fourth birthday February 29.

Charles E. Morton, formerly at 3626 Cottage Grove avenue, is now manager of the retail store of the Redondo Floral Co., at Los Angeles.

The George Wittbold Co. reports that the retail business, which is really the test of trade conditions, was greater in February than in any February since the firm has been keeping records, and that the same may be said of both December and January.

The Market.

Shipments are growing with the running of the sap in the trees. It begins to smell like spring. If you shut your eyes on the slush and fog and open them in front of any first-class flower store on Broadway or Fifth avenue, you will declare it is spring already. Acacia, tulips, lilacs, rhododendrons, primulas, forsythia; everything that breathes the air of the vernal season. These retail windows are really an inspiration.

Apart from violets, there is not much change to record in values. These have retrograded still further and Mr. Slinn tells me the news from the growers up the Hudson is of increasing shipments. I saw the sidewalk gentry offering big bunches at 15 cents. One of the wholesalers disposed of many thousands at 10 cents a hundred, he tells me, and can see no light on the situation. The fact is, evidently, that the growing power has outgrown the present possibilities of the market. There will be only the survival of the fittest, if a change for the better does not soon appear.

Rose prices have not changed. Carnations are abundant and dragging. Orchids are scarcer and higher, 60 cents the top. The balance of the list remains in statu quo, which means about the same. The holidays are over, the festivities are shelved, the market has no fulcrums by

The Club Banquet.

The twenty-first annual dinner of the New York Florists' Club on Saturday evening, February 29, was a great success in all respects, save that only forty-eight sat down to dine and make merry. With a membership of nearly 300, the lack of interest by the majority is unaccountable. Several of the club members brought guests with them, one gentleman, A. J. Guttman, having seven of his friends and lieutenants there. Many letters of regret, because of enforced absence, were received by Chairman Sheridan. P. O'Mara, in his letter, asked the privilege of proposing the toast to the health of President Weathered, to which that gentleman eloquently responded. He spoke of the club having reached the manhood stage, its twenty-first year of celebration, and of its glorious record. Many a year the honor of acting toastmaster had been his, but this was the first time the double honor had rested on his shoulders. Later in the evening Mr. Weathered again orated on the happy fulfillment of the great engineering feats that had made Long Island, Jersey and New York one great horticultural center, with a radius of fifty miles of contributory territory that should double the club's membership within a year. He spoke hopefully of the club home, the dream of all the years, which he expected soon to be a reality.

Vaudeville talent of a high order added greatly to the evening's enjoyment, the tenor solos of the artist being especially commendable. The club itself is full of music and the choruses shook the rafters of the St. Denis banquet hall, the voices of Harry Bunyard, Al. Rickards, Bobby Schultz, Bob Berry and Messrs. Scott and Campbell, high above them all.

The first toast, "Our Night," was immortalized by Ex-President Totty, who waxed eloquent upon the loss of those who were not there, deplored the light attendance and declared the club was the premier horticultural organization of the country. He spoke of the twenty years that had made history and prophesied within another twenty years a thousand members, closing with some of his chaste and touching stories. Later in the evening he had another opportunity to grow enthusiastic and prophetic, when R. M. Schultz, for the club, in warm and glowing diction presented him with a handsome diamond pin, as a token of the esteem and appreciation of his fellow members. Mr. Schultz referred to the loyalty of Mr. Totty to the club's interests and the warm place he had won in the hearts of his brethren. Mr. Totty told how proud he was of the club and of his membership, and pledged himself for all time to its advancement. The gift was worthy of the club and its recipient.

To the toast "The Society of American Florists," President F. H. Traendly responded. The address was a clear and practical plea for the S. A. F., and its increased membership. He advocated life membership in the older society by the New York club's members and spoke seriously of the responsibility and honor of the high position that had been conferred upon him. He lauded the grit and enthusiasm of Chicago, which won the big national flower show for that city, and urged the club's cooperation in helping to make it a grand success. He further urged his fellow members of the New York Florists' Club to be up and doing in behalf of the August convention, at Niagara Falls, to which a New York delegation in a special train is already assured.

J. Austin Shaw responded for "The Press," and E. V. Hallock, for "Our Sister Societies." Mr. Hallock is always eloquent. He eulogized the splendid dinner and declared that "when the horticulturist is not horticulturing, he is a jolly, good fellow." Sister societies were everywhere, he declared, and of every kind, and all had their uses and their mission: rose, carnation, peony, etc., but by means of an apt illustration he demonstrated that the S. A. F. was the leader of them all. He dwelt feelingly upon the difficulties and tribulations of the florist and joyously upon his triumphs and accomplishments for humanity.

After the silent toast to the memory of those who, during the year, had passed away, and a touching tribute to their honorable records, by the president, the company joined hands as the hands of the clock pointed to Sunday morning, and sang again the inspiring strains of Auld Lang Syne.

thanks given them for their excellent work. All the details, flower, table decorations from the liberal donors, musical program and elaborate menu, were thoroughly up-to-date.

This limited attendance should be the clinching argument in favor of a popular dinner for the New York club. One of the members has suggested a $2.50 dinner, at one of the popular hotels the Saturday after Easter, the ladies to be invited, and a program of music and speeches by prominent horticulturists of Boston, Philadelphia and New York.

Vice-president Marshall looks dignified in full dress, and Treasurer Allen seems "to the manor born." These Jerseyites are throwing out their chests since the tunnel has put them within ten minutes of New York.

Messrs Esler and Du Rie, the young old men of the club, from Jersey, were "feeling their oats," as happily as any of the boys.

The young blood is coming rapidly to the front in the club. There were few of the old-timers on hand. Some of them are sadly missed, too, and a reunion that would bring them all together once more would be an event worth featuring.

Secretary Young still misses the use of his broken wrist, but loyally shouldered his responsibility and took in the dinner with gusto, notwithstanding his handicap.

Walter Sheridan gave no indication of his appendicitis experience at the call to dinner and took the usual risks of absorptive skill, with cheerful safety, now that there can be no further operations.

There was no abnormal overflow of hilarity. The effervescence bubbled over in song. Everybody was in good voice; at times the windows rattled and the rafters rung. Street ears and policemen stopped and listened, and no one slept in the St. Denis until Sunday morning.

P. O'Mara was held up by a previous engagement. First time he has missed a club banquet and he was missed.

If all the club members, 250 of them, would take example by Mr. Guttman, and bring seven guests along, the attendance at the next banquet will be 1750. Why not?

The retail florists of New York were so busy Saturday night, with funeral and theater work, not one of them attended the banquet, but Alex. McConnell, our oldest life member, sent two handsome representatives.

Take it for all in all, it was a pretty good dinner and everybody but John enjoyed it immensely.

Various Notes.

The outing committee of the New York Florists' Club has arranged for the annual outing at Wetzel's grove, Wednesday, July 1. The grove, the steamer and the orchestra are all engaged and an effort will be made to have the horticultural societies with headquarters at Glen Cove, Bay Shore, Red Bank, Madison, Orange and Tarrytown, coöperate with the New York Florists' Club in this annual festivity. There are many members of the New York club in these sister societies. The vice-president, W. E. Marshall, is chairman of the outing committee; Charles Schenck, treasurer, and J. A. Shaw, secretary; Joseph A. Manda and Robert Schultz, sergeants-at-arms. The following have been added to the committee: Harry Bunyard, A. J. Rickards, Joseph Fenrich, Harry Hoffmeyer, Philip Kessler, Alex J. Guttman, Alfred Wheeler, John Donaldson, R. E. Berry, Charles H. Totty. A grand success is confidently anticipated.

The March meeting of the New York Florists' Club will be held Monday evening, March 9, and it promises to be of special interest. The outing committee will evolve its program, the banqueters will tell their experiences, and a lecture will be delivered by L. C. Corbett, of the Department of Agriculture, Washington, on "The Preparation of Greenhouse Soil." In addition to all this, there will be an exhibit of plants and cut flowers and the genial Will Rickards and his canteen committee will make things interesting.

as a branch business a series of auction sales of plants every day at 7 a. m. during the spring planting season. Elaborate arrangements are made for the convenience of customers. Two lower floors of the immense building are to be used, and the amphitheater seating 500. The sales will begin this month. They will be specially for the trade. Many growers have already signified their approval, the veteran Birnie among them. Buyers will be delighted to find their old friend, John P. Cleary, on the rostrum. The concern is well established, handling all branches of the produce business. These auctions will not interfere with the old established market on Vesey street. They are for the florists' trade exclusively.

Trepel, over at Losier's, in Brooklyn, has been a market benefactor lately. He has had bargain sales every day. Many thousands of carnations go over by the wagon-load ever morning. He sells at a small margin of profit and has had to double his force to meet the rush. Mrs. Trepel is now manager of his uptown store. He handles an enormous quantity of plants and cut flowers daily.

Ralph M. Ward & Co. declare business to be all that can be expected, with the volume growing yearly and the outlook optimistic.

Arthur T. Boddington has outgrown his ground floor facilities and added an entire upper floor to his space for office and other conveniences. Mr. Bunyard is home from a successful trip and sees only prosperity ahead. Nowhere but in New York has he found any lack of enterprise, because of the prevailing financial conditions.

George M. Geraghty, formerly with Thos. Young, Jr., and for years with a prominent department store's horticultural interests in Denver, is anticipating a residence in the Queen City of the Dominion of Canada, and the retail management of one of its greatest flower stores.

The Parker Bruen Manufacturing Co. is busy at the factory in Harrison, N. J., where facilities are increased every year.

Business has commenced to boom with Jacobs & Sons, Brooklyn. The new factory is working overtime.

David Clarke's Sons have been disposing lately of a surplus stock of large kentias for hotel and conservatory use, from their overstocked greenhouses in the Bronx.

Mr. Baldwin, of Secanens, is back from a successful trip through New England. The demand for orchids, he says, is growing all the time.

The Julius Roehrs Co. report a wide inquiry for their new rambler rose, Newport Fairy. If Julius, Jr., had called it the Flatbush Fairy, we would not have wondered.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

The Market.

If anything, conditions show some improvement from a week ago. Prices remain about the same, but rather better clearances have been effected. A good deal depends on the weather. On clear days trade is fairly good, while a change to rain or snow causes a slump. No decided improvement appears to be in sight. Roses are coming in larger quantities.

Beauties are fine but in little demand, the call being better for Killarney and Richmond. Of these two roses there were probably never finer samples seen than are in the Boston market today. Brides and Maids move slowly. Carnations are about the same, and still too abundant. Violets continue to sell better than anything else and have not weakened any as yet. Sweet peas are fine and meet with fair sale. Bulbous stock still sells at unprofitable prices, although the quality never was better. Some fine mignonette and antirrhinum are coming in. Lilies, both longiflorum and speciosum, are in good supply. Asparagus is selling better. Smilax is in light demand, but adiantum sells well. Funeral work in other cities causes a large demand for flowers. Without this support the market would be in a bad condition.

Market Exhibition.

The promoters of the Park Street market show are to be congratulated on the success of the exhibition held February 29, which filled the market and drew a record attendance of growers and dealers, many coming from considerable distances. It was much to be regretted that such a fine lot of exhibits had to be staged in such cramped quarters, where it was simply impossible to properly examine them, and another year it is to be hoped that the show will be held in Horticultural hall, where the exhibits can be properly staged, seen and examined.

The star features of the show were Elliott's marvelous Killarney roses and Sim's sweet peas, although there were many fine carnations and other exhibits.

We have an exceptionally fine supply of Carnations. Let us have your orders ably the finest large vase of Killarney ever put up, for the W. E. Doyle cup; stems four feet in length and magnificent flowers. He was also awarded a special prize of a solid silver cup and a certificate for excellence. Mr. Elliott also won the market prize for twenty-five pink roses, with Killarney, and the class for twenty-five red roses, with Richmond of superb quality. The Waban Conservatories also showed Killarney of high grade, also Richmonds. They were first for twenty-five American Beauties. For twenty-five white, Montrose Greenhouses led with Bride; W. H. Elliott second with the same variety. The same exhibitors had excellent Bridesmaid. R. T. McGorum showed good Bride and Maid, W. H. Elliott, Safrano. From E. G. Hill Co. came Rhea Reid, the new red forcing rose, in good shape. The cup for the best new rose to be disseminated in 1908 went to W. P. Craig for Mrs. Jardine, which was well shown and much admired.

Carnations made a big showing, filling several long tables. For fifty crimson, E. Winkler won with Harry Fenn; S. J. Goddard, second with Octoroon. For dark pink, the last exhibitor led, with fine Helen Goddard; second, Peirce Bros., with Lawson. For light pink, Goddard again won, with Enchantress; Peter Fisher second, with Winsor. The latter took first for scarlet, with splendid Beacons; second, S. J. Goddard, with Victory. White Perfection secured first for S. J. Goddard in whites; Patten & Co., second, with the same variety. There were ten entries in this class, all of high quality. Leonard Cousins had the best striped, showing Variegated Lawson.

In the class calling for twenty-five blooms of each color, the winners were: Crimson, S. J. Goddard, with Fenn; Littlefield & Wyman, second, with Octoroon. For dark pink, Littlefield & Wyman first, with Lawson; S. J. Goddard second, with Helen Goddard. Light pink, C. S. Strout first, with Enchantress; Littlefield & Wyman second, with the same variety. Scarlet, S. J. Goddard first, with Victory; Littlefield & Wyman second, with Robert Craig. White, Patten & Co. first out of nine entries, with White Perfection; S. J. Goddard second, with Lady Bountiful. Variegated, Peirce Bros. first, with Mrs. Patten; Backer & Co. second, with Mrs. Patten.

For 100 blooms one variety, Peter Fisher won the special cup with superb White Perfection. For 100 blooms in a vase, not less than six varieties, the silver cup went to S. J. Goddard; Peirce Bros. second. Both showed fine vases. For best twenty-five blooms of any new striped variety, S. J. Goddard's Priscilla won. This promises to be heard from later. New Hampshire College was second.

Patten & Co. had the best vases of unnamed seedlings, showing No. 5024, crimson; No. 213, yellow, and No. 46205, white, in fine shape. Backer & Co. and New Hampshire College also made some excellent exhibits in this class.

For twenty-five Winsor, Peter Fisher won, followed by S. J. Goddard. For fifty Beacon, S. J. Goddard and C. S. Strout won, with grand vases. The A. H. Hews cup for fifty blooms each of six varieties went to Peter Fisher.

There were many interesting seedlings and novelties shown, apart from those in competitive classes. H. W. Field had a fine vase of President Seelye. F. R. Pierson Co. showed Winsor in splendid condition. H. A. Jahn had Lloyd and Jahn's Crimson. William Nicholson had a superb vase of Afterglow, which stood up splendidly. Paul Thomson showed Neptune. H. W. Field had Viola Sinclair, a deep pink seedling. Fritz Bahr, Highland Park, Ill., sent a vase of Lucille, but it arrived in a sleepy condition. Backer & Co., among other things, had a fine white seedling. Andrew Christensen had a good commercial deep pink variety. E. A. Wood had his new scarlet. John Marshall, Newport, R. I., had an excellent scarlet seedling, the only one honored with a certificate of merit. This variety also secured a silver medal at Newport, February 25, and will, no doubt, be further heard from. S. J. Goddard had a nice vase of White Fair Maid.

For the best exhibit from stall-holders in the Music Hall market, A. Batley & Son were first and Littlefield & Wyman second, each showing carnations. Mann Bros. were first for best display of cut bulbous stock, with an excellent assortment, also first for pot plants, their lilacs, azaleas and amaryllis being good. H. M. Robinson & Co. had the best valley. They also showed gardenias and Adiantum Farleyense. For twenty-five mignonette, William Nicholson led with splendid spikes; E. A. Wood second. For 100 pansies, W. C. Ward was first among several competitors. R. D. Kimball had the best antirrhinum, and F. T. White, excellent Lilium speciosum.

There was a grand show of violets.

For 100 Campbell, H. F. Calder was first, H. F. Woods second. For 100 any other double, Paul Thomson was first, with Imperial; H. M. Sanderson second, with Farquhar. For 100 Princess of Wales, Esty Bros. were first; William Sim second. For 100 any other single, William Sim was first, with Boston; H. F. Woods second. The Wheeler trophy, a silver cup valued at $25, for best 200 blooms any new violet, went to William Sim, for Boston, which was shown in splendid condition. The violets unfortunately had a dark corner and could not be seen to advantage.

For 100 white sweet peas, William Sim won, with Florence Denzer; H. M. Sanderson second. For 100 pink, William Sim was first, with Christmas pink; H. M. Sanderson second. A. C. Zvolanek was second for any other color, with a pretty lavender variety. The Zvolanek cup for vases of 200 spikes each of Christmas Pink and Florence Denzer went to William Sim for a magnificent lot of flowers, one of the features of the exhibition.

Other exhibits included fine giant candytuft from R. T. McGorum, double blue lobelias from Joseph Fuller, a new dwarf sport of Nephrolepis Whitmani of excellent promise from H. H. Barrows & Son, and fine wallflowers from Frank T. White.

Daniel Iliffe showed his improved ventilating apparatus, which seemed to take the eye of many. The market was crowded during the whole time the show was open and it was a pity it could not have been kept open a day longer for the general public to inspect it.

The judges were A. H. Fewkes, New-

At Music Hall Market.

The stall-holders of the Music Hall market at short notice got up a most creditable exhibition. No prizes were offered, but a number of the members contributed flowers. These included large vases of Fair Maid and Enchantress carnations from A. Porter, 100 splendid Enchantress from William L. Lewis, and Debutante, a light pink seedling, and a good red seedling from J. W. Foote, who also contributed cyclamens. H. A. Stevens had several seedlings. A. Roper had a fine vase of his variegated Bay State, also a fine Lawson-colored seedling. Donald Carmichael had mixed carnations; Lewis Smith, L. E. Small and J. H. Leach & Son excellent Beacon, and John Barr a fine vase of his flesh pink seedling.

John McFarland had a fine vase of Brunner roses and excellent lily of the valley, W. T. Walke sweet peas, Robert Montgomery Bride and Bridesmaid roses, H. F. Crawford Perle roses, and M. J. Aylward Bridesmaid. F. L. Hardy had pink and white antirrhinums, J. E. Horrigan marguerites. Dobbins & Shannon, of Woburn, had grand single violets. J. Cummings, M. B. Dallahie, George W. Ayer, J. H. Newman and Malcolm Orr also had fine single or double violets.

The stall-holders of this market are hoping to hold a prize exhibition a little later in the season, when they will have a much larger display.

Various Notes.

Robert Craig, of Philadelphia, delivered a splendid lecture on "The Private Gardener" at Horticultural hall, February 29. Mr. Craig's many Boston friends were glad to hear him once more and those who failed to attend his lecture missed a great treat.

At Horticultural hall, February 29, R. & J. Farquhar & Co. showed hippeastrums in flower from bulbs grown at their nursery in Porto Rico. These were of excellent quality. They also had two well flowered plants of Rose Tausendschon, which took the popular eye. Mrs. E. A. Mansfield showed fine vases of Lawson, White Lawson and Fair Maid carnations, which received a gratuity.

Roses and violets will have their innings at the next meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, March 17. The papers by expert rosarians, and other attractions, will again draw a large crowd. The annual banquet a week later promises to be more largely attended than ever before.

At the club meeting, February 25, omission was made of the following exhibits in last week's report: Seedling carnations from Lively & Bond and Mrs. E. A. Mansfield; John N. May, a deep pink seedling carnation raised by W. A. Manda, and Elijah A. Wood an excellent scarlet seedling.

J. T. Butterworth is marketing excellent valley at present. He still is cutting plenty of Cattleya Trianae, also dendrobiums and other seasonable orchids.

W. W. Edgar & Co. have 25,000 lilies coming along for Easter. They had a considerable percentage of diseased stock. Peiree Bros. report the same trouble.

There promises to be a good delegation from Boston to the Chicago rose meeting and some interesting exhibits from local growers will be forwarded.

Edward MacMulkin had three large wedding orders last week, the Talbot-Furman decorations at Longwood being extensive.

Visitors last week included Harry May, Summit, N. J.; F. R. Pierson, Tarrytown, N. Y.; Robert Craig and William P. Craig, Philadelphia; J. S. Hay, Philadelphia; G. E. Buxton, Nashua, N. H.; D. J. Sinclair, Northampton, Mass.; John Marshall, Newport, R. I.; S. J. Reuter, Westerly, R. I.; Henry Wild, Greenwich, Conn.; Paul Thomson, West Hartford, Conn.

William T. Walke, of Salem, is sending in some fine sweet peas to the Music Hall market.

Prof. Kenyon L. Butterfield, of Amherst, will be the lecturer March 7. His subject will be "Agricultural Education in Our Schools."

John McFarland, as usual, is first in the field with Brunners, of which he is now cutting some fine flowers.

George W. Butterworth is now acting as salesman for his father in Boston.

J. B. Velie, local representative of the Lord & Burnham Co., reports business as good, considering the prevailing depression.

Indications point to a record spring show at Horticultural hall, commencing March 20, applications for space coming in already from a number of growers. The display of carnations will be large.

William Nicholson is busy among shamrocks these days and will clean out many thousands before St. Patrick's day.

Houghton & Clark had a nice window display of elivias last week.

March came in like the proverbial lamb, but a snow storm the first evening was a reminder that some winter is yet in store for us.

TOLEDO, OHIO.

The trade unites in reporting poor business last week, the drop being due to bad weather. Funeral orders, which have been heavy, dropped off, leaving the results for the week decidedly low. Spring flowers are going slower than was expected and the greenhouse owners are noticing the lack of trade, as well as the retail dealers. With an even break on the weather proposition the trade expects much better results this week.

The Schoen Floral Co. has moved into its new store on Adams street and is preparing to do business on an enlarged scale. Mr. Schoen states that he will greatly enlarge his stock in the near future, but is at present confined to the task of getting settled in his new place of business.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The pre-Lenten season has closed quietly. There was no especial rush during the last days of gayety, only a few varieties of flowers being at all scarce. Fancy American Beauty roses were in demand, chiefly because there were fewer of them to be had than at any time since the season began. With this, and possibly one or two other exceptions, there were so many flowers of all varieties that the market was never bare for a moment.

Carnations continue extraordinarily plentiful, Enchantress being so numerous that the average price on this variety is below that of any of the other fancies. Beacon and Winsor are probably the best sellers on the market today, the demand for the latter variety being so keen as to warrant the belief that it will be even more popular next season. Good white varieties do not bring fancy prices, but average much better than Enchantress.

Giant white daisies are in fair supply and sell quite well. The situation regarding other flowers is but little changed, the extreme weather of last week having made but little difference in shipments.

Indications for the first week of Lent point to but little falling off in demand. The supply of carnations is expected to decrease, while that of American Beauties and the fancy grades of the smaller roses is expected to increase.

Club Meeting.

At the meeting of the Florists' Club March 3 J. Otto Thilow read a most interesting paper descriptive of the European trips of himself and J. D. Eisele last autumn. He was heartily applauded. H. A. Dreer exhibited a new chrysanthemum, Blush Queen Alexandra. It is a pretty soft pink double daisy. W. A. Manda, South Orange, N. J., showed a bunch of his new pink carnation.

The club dinner will take place at Horticultural hall March 11.

The Second Assembly.

The second assembly ball, always held on the Friday preceding Ash Wednesday, marks the close of the gay season for this city's 400. The ball was again held in the Bellevue-Stratford, the handsome ballroom being beautifully decorated for the occasion by J. J. Habermehl's Sons in their best style. It is not my purpose to describe the canopy of foliage and flowering plants, brightened by electroliers where the patronesses received, the arbor of rustic work covered with southern smilax through which the ballroom was entered, or the stage-setting for the musicians, in which yellow and white jonquils and azaleas harmonized with the tropical green. I wish to call attention to an innovation in the shape of a wonderful orange tree, said to have been brought from Florida, that graced the center of the ballroom during one dance. This tree, covered with flowers and fruit, made an unusual effect, appearing in a ballroom in the heart of a great city. The effect was heightened by orange-colored lights freely used throughout. The supper, served in the Palm Room, was beautified by orange and yellow flowers and fruit on the tables. Dwarf plants of Otaheite oranges in pots were placed in the center of some tables, while on others were bunches of jonquils, daffodils, yellow tulips, yellow daisies, and the exquisitely graceful Acacia pubescens.

Conditions Abroad.

George A. Strohlein, of Henry A. Dreer, who returned a short time ago from a business trip to Europe, reports that the medium sizes of kentias continue scarce, with a probability that they will not be equal to the demand for a year or two. Mr. Strohlein saw Azalea Princess Elizabeth, better known as Vervæneana alba, in full bloom. He considers this variety superior to any white azalea on the market today, this opinion being based on information given by the growers and on personal observation, the variety being in every way a true Vervæneana excepting in color, which is a pure white. Mr. Strohlein was much interested in the preparations going on, both in Belgium and in England, for the coming quinquennial exhibition to be held next month. He saw crotons of enormous size, beautifully grown and highly colored, specimens such as have never been seen on this side of the water; also magnificent specimen azaleas and other plants that have been grown especially for this exhibition.

Various Notes.

Samuel S. Pennock notes an excellent demand for fancy American Beauty roses.

J. J. Karins, of Henry A. Dreer, has just returned from a most successful business trip. Mr. Karins is deservedly popular among his many friends.

Paul Berkowitz, of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., says that the florists' supply business is certainly one of extreme activity. There is no cause whatever to complain of not having enough to do.

R. G. Palmer, who has many friends among the growers and commission houses of this city, is, I regret to say, confined to his home by serious illness.

The senior member of the firm of Smith & Fetters, Cleveland, O., was in town a few days ago.

Shipping business has been better during the last week than has the local demand.

John McIntyre, who is in a position to judge, predicts that the southern daffodils will be here about March 20.

The many friends of J. Liddon Pennock will be glad to know that he is recuperating rapidly at Atlantic City.

third Tuesday will be observed instead of the second and fourth Tuesdays in each month.

February 25 the club nominated the following officers for election on the last Tuesday in March: For president, A. E. Massey; vice-president, W. L. Snow; secretary, G. F. Hamlin; treasurer, Victor V. Dorp; captain, George Anderson; assistant captain, G. S. McCarty, and board of directors, Dr. George Gobell, H. L. David and Thomas Tansey.

NORTH TONAWANDA, N. Y.

With January 1, 1908, the King Construction Co. divorced its two establishments, the one at Toronto being now on an entirely separate basis from the business in the United States, which has been incorporated with the following officers: President, R. O. King; vice-president, E. O. Spillman; secretary and treasurer, C. E. C. Hepworth. The company reports a fair amount of business in sight for spring.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Trade in the flower market last week kept up pretty well, but prices on stock went low on almost everything, the wholesalers having plenty of stock to fill any order that came in, either local or shipping. The Lenten season opening this week, a number of fashionable weddings and parties took place Monday and Tuesday, for which quite a lot of cut stock was required.

Roses are becoming more plentiful, but there are not any too many of fancy quality. Carnations are overplentiful, although quality is extra good. Violets and sweet peas sell well, though cheap. Bulbous stock is plentiful and low in price. All kinds of greens are abundant.

Various Notes.

Henry Emmons, of Belleville, was a caller last week. He is sending a nice lot of white carnations to H. G. Berning and reports a fine run of trade in his city.

The Burton-Allison Co. and the Manchester Chemical Co., in our city, are busy preparing green coloring for carnations for St. Patrick's day, for which they have a great many advance orders.

Charles Kuehn has started his spring cleaning early. The place is being decorated and all hands are busy in the mix-up.

Henry Ostertag reports that he had a few good wedding orders just before Lent set in. He is taking great interest in the building of the new coliseum near his place of business.

C. Young & Sons Co. are this week making a splendid show of tulips in their large windows, which serve as a great attraction.

J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, spent a day in the city last week. His time is much taken up with the duties of secretary of the Illinois State Florists' Association. He and President Albert T. Hey, of the association, visited the Belleville florists last week and spent a most enjoyable day.

On an inspection trip we find the florists west of Grand avenue are making attractive window displays of bulb stock. Among them are Fred C. Weber, Townsend Floral Co., Miss Newman, F. H. Weber, Ellison Floral Co., and Kalisch. They report a good sale on blooming plants.

Our local growers about town are busy now preparing their Easter stock. The prospects are good for plenty of lilies, which they say are all looking well and free from disease. Azaleas, too, will be plentiful and fine.

The second spring flower show of the St. Louis Horticultural Society will open March 10 and promises to be larger and better than the first one last year. The executive committee is hard at work completing all arrangements.

The Florists' Club will hold its regular monthly meeting in the old meeting hall, March 12. The trustees will report on the meeting hall and the annual rose exhibition will be held at this meeting.

W. Abrahamson, of E. H. Hunt's, Chicago, was a visitor last week. J. J. B.

UTICA, N. Y.

Carnation Exhibition.

The Utica Florists' Club held its seventh annual carnation meeting February 28 and it was in every way a gratifying success. The club has a membership of over sixty and the attendance was large. There was a magnificent display of cut flowers, mainly carnations, which were exhibited in vases placed on long tables in the center of the hall.

The exhibits included a new cerise pink of large size, called Splendor, which is to be disseminated this year by Stevenson Bros., Baltimore, Md.

Victoria, from J. H. Cushing, Quidnick, R. I., attracted much attention, as did a vase of Neptune from Paul Thomson, of West Hartford, Conn. On the same table was President Seelye, from H. W. Field, Northampton, Mass., a large vase of Beacon from Peter Fisher, of Ellis, Mass., and one of Harvard, from J. D. Cockcroft, of Northport, L. I.

A vase of the new single violet, Boston, which will be sent out this year, also stood on this table. The violets were from William Sim, of Cliftondale, Mass.

Another exhibit deserving of special mention was a vase of Rhea Reid rose from the E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind.

On another table was a fine bunch of Sulphur Phoenix narcissus and two vases of hyacinths shown by C. W. Bushinger, of New Hartford.

Dr. W. A. Rowlands had a large display of carnations. L. F. Goodwin, of Clark Mills, showed White Perfection; J. O. Graham, of Little Falls, showed fine Enchantress and Rose-pink Enchant-

After the exhibits had been duly examined and discussed the florists partook of a banquet.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

Mark Aitken, of Springfield, Mass., is taking a trip to Bermuda and Cuba, hoping to be thoroughly recuperated in time for the Easter rush. Carl Meacham (not Goodenough, as given in my last note), who has charge of the store end of the business, reports very satisfactory returns for this month, with good orders ahead.

J. W. Adams & Co., of Springfield, are getting excellent returns from Carnation Prospector, which for freedom of bloom and intensity of color stands unequalled. While not a fancy, it is a great commercial sort. The new house, 42x100 feet and eighteen feet to the ridge, is very satisfactory. Cement slabs on iron supports have been adopted for the benches.

D. W. Brainard, of Thompsonville, Conn., has about 25,000 feet of glass and intends adding during the summer. He

MRS. JARDINE

Every Florist who Plants a Rose for Winter Forcing wants at least Six Qualities

A FREE, STRONG GROWTH, WITH GOOD FOLIAGE. A VARIETY THAT CAN BE EASILY GROWN. LARGE FLOWERS ON LONG STEMS. DELICIOUS FRAGRANCE. DISTINCT, PLEASING COLOR THAT WILL SELL AT SIGHT. A ROSE THAT WILL HOLD ITS COLOR IN THE DULL DAYS OF DECEMBER AND JANUARY.

MRS. JARDINE has all these characteristics, and, in addition, is of so perfect a form that it can be used either in the bud or half expanded flower. The color is a bright rosy pink, shading in the outer petals to salmon pink, and, even in January, when Bridesmaids and Killarney lose their color, Mrs. Jardine is as bright as in October or March.

We extend a cordial invitation to everyone interested in this New Rose to visit our Nurseries and see it growing.

MRS. JARDINE has been awarded Two Silver Medals, numerous Certificates, and successfully stood the best test which any novelty can possibly have in passing unanimously, in December, the Award Committee of the New York Florists' Club after an exhaustive examination of the growing plants, with a score of 92 points.

Strong Plants on own roots, from 2½-inch pots, $6.00 per doz.; $30.00 per 100; $70.00 per 250; $250.00 per 1000; 5000 for $1125.00; 10,000 for $2125.00.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

The regular monthly meeting of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society was held at Good Templars hall, Friday evening, February 28. The executive committee reported that the following dates had been arranged for the annual exhibitions: Summer show, June 14; fall show, November 4 to 6. An invitation was read from the Monmouth County Horticultural Society to attend its fourth annual dinner at Red Bank, March 3. C. M. Atkinson, Irvington, was elected an active member of the society.

William Scott offered a prize for twelve cut roses, but we are sorry to report that roses must be off crop around here, as the only roses on the table were from Robert Scott & Son, Sharon Hill, Pa. They sent their new rose, Mrs. Jardine, which after a critical discussion was awarded a certificate of merit. "Rose Growing Under Glass" was the subject for the evening. The discussion was opened by Joseph Mooney, who was followed by many members. L. A. M.

THE READERS' CORNER.

Charcoal Screenings.

A less persistent man than myself would give up trying to tell the trade about it, but I know that charcoal screenings are good for florists and my many local customers prove it, but how to make your readers know it also baffles me, and I am willing to be shown.

You may, if you please, repeat my advertisements at the same price in another part of the paper nearer the ads of tobacco or fertilizers, but it does seem to me that when one of your correspondents asks what will be the best for sour soil, or a similar question, it might be possible for you to answer "charcoal screenings"; that is, if you have had the time to read all or any of the testimonials I have sent you.

I believe that your readers are progressive men or they would not take a trade paper, and, therefore, anything like my purifier ought to appeal to them.

E. V. SIDELL.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

LAFAYETTE, IND.—Herman Roth is preparing to put up another greenhouse at his place on the west side. It will afford bench-room for 2,000 American Beauty plants.

DECATUR, ILL.—Saturday night, February 22, the flower store of Mrs. Jacob Daut was entered by burglars. The report does not state what booty was secured.

TROY, O.—C. W. Skinner and W. H. Coles have formed a partnership as the Skinner Irrigation Co., to conduct the business of C. W. Skinner in irrigation systems.

DANBURY, CONN.—T. H. Judd has added a carnation house, 25x100 feet, to his extensive plant. He finds a steady sale for good stock and predicts a busy spring. He goes light on bulbous stock.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., George S. Green, Chicago; First Vice-pres., M. H. Duryea, New York; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. Twenty-sixth annual convention at Hotel Pontchartrain, Detroit, Mich., June 23 to 25, 1908.

J. M. CLARK, secretary of the Leonard Seed Co., Chicago, has been on the sick list for a fortnight.

GERMAN seeds are still arriving in considerable quantity, shipments having been later than usual.

THE counter trade has begun to take on a little activity in the cities that have had a touch of spring.

THE pea and bean growers are slowly convincing the farmers that this is not a favorable season, on general conditions, for a big boost in prices.

EVERY now and then someone digs up a little onion seed that will germinate and for which he is willing to take a price that is within reason.

THE mail trade for February was about normal and March starts much as usual. Spring weather is needed to put full force into the mailing trade.

THE wholesale trade reports numerous fill-in orders already coming to hand from the southern trade; and it still is possible to supply most of the requirements.

DEALINGS with the canners are at a standstill. The wholesale grocery trade is holding off in booking contracts for the 1908 pack and the canners appear to have all the seeds they need just now.

THE crop of clover seed in Illinois in 1907 was 30,233 bushels, except for the crop of 1905, which was 29,913 bushels, the smallest on record, but the average price per bushel was $8.30, much the highest ever realized.

THE California growers are feeling quite cheerful. They say that they have had no trouble in booking contracts at the prices asked and the season to date has been favorable to all seed crops in the Santa Clara valley.

MANY houses find they are likely to have enough of the items they thought would be shortest, as the buyers show a disposition to take "something just as good" instead of the varieties on which there has been a big advance in prices.

A FEW days ago President Green and Secretary Kendel met in Detroit and made final arrangements with the Hotel Pontchartrain for headquarters for the twenty-sixth annual convention of the American Seed Trade Association June 23 to 25. The use of a suite of rooms on the parlor floor has been secured for the meetings and ample accommodations for all have been assured at reasonable rates.

THE Illinois College of Agriculture is running a "seed special" over the lines of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois railroad.

C. PETERSON & SONS, florists, Escanaba, Mich., will put in a full stock of garden and flower seeds for the spring trade.

THE season is on with full force with the seedsmen of the Pacific northwest and they say the indications point to a larger total than last year.

THE National Seed Co., 117 Fifth avenue, is making a bid for a part of the Chicago business in garden and field seeds, poultry supplies, etc.

L. L. MAY & Co., St. Paul, say that the season is starting better than it ever did, the business evidently feeling the stimulus of the greatly improved facilities afforded by the new building put up since the last season.

IN spite of the fact that last year the Chicago postoffice held up the seed catalogue of Montgomery Ward & Co., and the assistant attorney general for the department at Washington said the action was right, some almost identical prize offers are found in seed literature now going through the mails, but originating at other offices than Chicago. The unequal enforcement of the law is one of the standing complaints against the post-office department, some business men being allowed to do things not permitted to those of other cities.

There has been a great increase in the number of orders in the last few days, and they average larger than last year. With your permission, I will say a few words in regard to A. E. Kunderd's ruffled gladioli. He and I have been corresponding ever since he commenced to grow the gladiolus extensively, and I have been waiting for an opportunity to buy some of the new strain. While other growers may have noticed a slight inclination toward the ruffled or crimped type, it remained for A. E. Kunderd to seize and develop it. From the illustrations of it in the REVIEW of January 23, and from conversation with Mr. Kunderd, I am expecting it to become very popular. One of your readers expresses a doubt as to its value, but perhaps he gave the matter no great consideration. With most flowers, breadth of petal, other things being equal, is a desirable characteristic. Take a tulip with sharp-pointed petals and no one with correct taste cares for it. If the petals be broad, so that there is no notch between them, they are spoken of as ample and generous. We have the Masterpiece pansy, with petals not only broad but ruffled, and it is accorded a high place. The new Countess Spencer sweet peas are "waved," and so beautiful that the demand is enormous.

The daffodil is the most popular flower in England except the rose, and some of the new varieties are sold at $100 and more for a single bulb. They are beautifully crimped, and the mouth of the trumpet is so full that sometimes the diameter almost equals the depth. Who would care for a daffodil that has not a crimped edge? So I am in favor of A. E. Kunderd's ruffled gladioli and will give him credit for doing what any of us might have done long ago if we had only recognized a good thing when we saw it.

In regard to a gladiolus society, there is a pressing need of it. The flower is becoming exceedingly popular and is extensively advertised, and yet many growers use the plural for the singular and vice versa, and are unable to pronounce either one correctly. Varieties are being grown and put on the market under two or more names, and growers are not at all agreed on the characteristics of a good variety. We need a gladiolus society to set us all right, so that we can help each other instead of pulling apart.
 M. CRAWFORD.

VEGETABLE BREEDING.

[A paper by W. Van Fleet, of Little Silver, N. J., read at the meeting of the National Council of Horticulture, Jamestown, Va., September 23, 1907.]

The breeding of vegetables doubtless began when primitive man ceased wholly to rely on the wild products of nature. The dawning intelligence that made the beginnings of plant culture would soon lead to discrimination in varieties and the perpetuation by various propagative means of the better rather than the inferior type of herbs, roots and seeds found desirable for his use. Thus in all probability was born selection, the most powerful of all forces in the modification of vegetable life by man. So potent and far-reaching is selection, consistently carried through successive generations, and so widely do modern cultivated forms differ from the original stock, that the majority of vegetables of the present day cannot with reasonable certainty be traced back to their primitive species. The experiments of Vilmorin showed that an edible root similar to the Student parsnip of modern gardens could be evolved in less than five generations of critical selection from the common, semi-poisonous, wild European parsnip. We may imagine, then, the profound influence of continuous selection, running back to far prehistoric ages, on the plants used as culinary vegetables.

What family of plants first claimed the attention of primitive man, we cannot with certainty know, but from the shadowy evidence of ancient remains it would appear that beans, peas and related legumes were among the earliest cultivated vegetables. tory manner in which it may have been practiced, varietal selection yet remains the most certain and powerful method of molding vegetable life to meet the needs or fancies of man. It is the truest form of breeding, the genuine pedigree work by which we have slowly climbed toward the goal of vegetable perfection. Violent climatic changes, distant removals, intense fertilization and the little known forces of mutation or bud variation have all had their influence, but they are small indeed compared to that of continued selection. Modification by intentional hybridization or cross-pollination, though a powerful means of adding new characteristics, is of such recent practice, beginning, in fact, almost with the closing years of the last century, that it has made but limited impression on vegetable types. The present standard varieties are, with few exceptions, the outcome of selection alone. Hybridization, coupled with the all-necessary selection, is likely to bear an increasing share in future vegetable breeding. Following is a brief resume of the principal modern vegetables, with reference to the general manner of their production.

Asparagus.

The cultivated varieties of asparagus all appear to have been developed by age-long selection from the common European species, A. officinalis. A few modern kinds are claimed to be cross-bred, but whether intentionally so we are not informed. Asparagus, being largely dioecious in blooming habit, is readily cross-fertilized when two or more varieties are grown in the near vicinity. A Massachusetts society has undertaken breeding experiments with asparagus, both on the lines of pure selection and well considered crossing, with the hope of producing varieties more resistant to rust than those now cultivated.

Beets.

Modern garden beets are admirable examples of critical selection for untold generations of culture. Certain varieties leave little to be desired in elegance of form, coloring or quality. The present effort appears to be toward uniformity of type rather than refinement of the above-mentioned features. The use of beets for sugar production has, however, led to wonderful development of forms suitable for that important commercial purpose. The sugar content of the beet has been more than doubled in less than forty years of concentrated breeding work, largely under government supervision. Selection of the best sugar producing individuals for successive generations has been the all-powerful means, but cross-pollination is now beginning to play its part. One of the important objects sought by the breeders of our Department of Agriculture is the production of a reliable strain of one-germ beet seeds, in order to lessen the expense of thinning the young plants. Everyone knows that ordinary beet "seeds" are merely coherent multiple fruits, usually containing several true seeds, which may germinate close together. The Department breeders employ both selection and crossing in the furtherance of their work.

Cabbage.

Cabbage and related brassicas are without doubt bred almost wholly by selection. Profound, indeed, have been the changes wrought in developing our hard-heading cabbages, our cauliflower, Brussels sprouts, kales and even kohlrabis from the loose-tufted wild cabbage of Britain. Varieties cross with some freedom when planted near-by and useful variations may have arisen in that manner, but the tendency is carefully to segregate seed plantings so as to reduce natural crossing to the minimum. The writer has made crosses between green-leaved and highly glaucous cabbage varieties, with the production of offspring having leaves of intermediate coloring, but retaining the heading characteristics of both parents in different individuals. Prolonged attempts to hybridize Chinese cabbage of the species Brassica Pestsai and B. Chinensis with garden cabbages entirely failed. Apparently distinct species of cruciferous genera are not easy to cross. We have European reports of successful crosses between the hairy-leaved turnips and the rutabaga, but none appears to have risen to commercial importance.

scenes, where in a state of low vitality a human being would go down, down, down, until no further resistance was possible and life went out without a struggle. Similar cases in the incipency of the malady, by the use of proper stimulation and tonic agents, were tided over until the living element had overcome the unseen foe, resulting in renewed vigor and a return to a state of normal health.

By this comparison I was led to the conclusion that if I could bring the bioplasts to a state of activity, supra-normal if necessary, they would build up more rapidly than the malady, stem-rot, was tearing down. Thus the trouble would soon disappear.

I have never had the opportunity of very extensive study on plant pathology and the application of remedies, but in reading the REVIEW I had noticed a number of times that sodium nitrate was spoken of as a vegetable stimulant. Taking it as such, I believed it to be one, at least, of the needful elements indicated in the case. And on this conclusion I began to apply a solution as follows:

One heaping teaspoon of sodium nitrate to two gallons of water. I sprinkled this lightly over the entire benches, moistening the plants and the surface of the soil. An hour or so later I sprinkled with pure water, washing off the foliage and moistening the soil to the depth of half an inch, thus carrying the sodium nitrate to the roots of the plants, to be taken into the circulation.

After one week I could plainly see that the ravages of the disease were arrested. Then I repeated the treatment and I never saw plants act more satisfactorily or give more perfect results.

Since this experience, after I have sowed my lettuce seed I moisten the surface lightly whenever a show of dryness appears. In one week the plants are through the ground. I at once give them the sodium nitrate treatment, and as the days go by they are truly a delight to look on.

I want to know if I am right in my treatment. Is this a good line to follow, or may it have been one of those unaccountable things that happen, the stem-rot simply quitting of itself?

W. L. LEEKA.

FERTILIZER FOR LETTUCE.

What is the best fertilizer to use for the second and third crops of lettuce, on soil well enriched with rotten horse manure when put in? Also how much should be used? My lettuce looks healthy and grows all right, but not so fast as the first crop did. How about the cow and sheep manure which comes in bags?

B. A. B.

Seeing that your soil is already well enriched with rotted horse manure, it has probably all it will stand of this nature. This being the case, I would prefer to use some stimulant such as nitrate of soda or sulphate of ammonia. This would undoubtedly facilitate growth and should not cause softness, seeing that the dull days are pretty well over and the can be determined by the microscope or by chemistry. And in pathology I learned that disease follows a state of low vital resistance. Now, if this is true in the animal, why not equally so in the vegetable?

As I saw one plant after another deliberately perish, without any apparent cause, it took my mind back to hospital weather getting brighter all the time. The only time there would be danger from using this is during the dull, short days, when growth is naturally soft. Both the fertilizers given above are soluble in water and should be used at the rate of one ounce to one gallon of water, making the application about twice weekly. WM. SCOTT.

FAILURE WITH MUSHROOMS.

Please advise me how to grow mushrooms from spawn. Two months ago I placed some spawn in a greenhouse, under a bench, with the temperature from 60 to 70 degrees. No mushrooms have yet appeared. What is the trouble and what shall I do about it? G. W. C.

Your question is very indefinite, as you do not say how you made or prepared your bed previous to putting in the spawn, or whether you made any bed at all. Hence it is impossible to tell where your trouble is in this particular case.

To grow mushrooms satisfactorily it is necessary first to procure good, fresh horse manure, as free from straw as possible. Mix with this about one-third of fresh loam and make a bed ten to twelve inches deep, packing the material as firmly as possible. The material, after the bed is made, will generate a heat of probably 100 degrees or over, but it should be allowed to recede to 85 degrees before putting in the spawn. Make holes in the bed about three inches deep and four inches apart, and insert a piece of spawn about the size of a walnut in each hole, covering over with the material. When the temperature has gone down to 75 degrees, cover over with about two inches of good, fresh loam, beating this down smoothly with the back of a spade or some such instrument. About a week afterward give a covering of straw, to prevent the bed from going down too low; about three inches will be sufficient. This covering will have to be removed when the mushrooms begin to make their appearance, which should be about six weeks from the time of spawning. An overhead temperature of from 60 to 70 degrees is far too high; 50 to 55 degrees is about right.

It is important that the bed should be made under a bench where there are no heating pipes; otherwise the drying influence from these would cause serious injury to the crop. It is also important to hang a curtain around the bench, so as to make the whole thing as dark as possible. Be sure your spawn is fresh, or failure is sure to result.

WM. SCOTT.

Will you kindly answer the following question regarding black rot on tomatoes? I have a house 21x100 feet, heated by steam. cause and if spraying with Bordeaux will prevent it? H. E. R.

Providing you have a suitable variety for forcing, black rot in tomatoes is seldom troublesome when the conditions are right. Some varieties are so susceptible to this that it does not pay to grow them, but with such varieties as Stirling Castle and Lorillard I have never experienced any trouble, providing the moisture in the house was pretty well dried up before closing down time, so that the atmosphere was dry while the house was close. While air is on the house fungous diseases make little or no headway, but with a close house and a heavy atmosphere the conditions are just right for their development and spread. By trying to avoid such conditions and picking off all affected fruit as soon as the disease makes its appearance, you ought to be able to stamp it out, unless your variety is entirely unsuitable.

An important point with this crop is to procure seed from healthy stock of reliable, well tried varieties. If the seed is saved from indoor-grown plants for several successive years, the artificial conditions to which they are subjected naturally reduce their vitality. Hence, to maintain the healthy condition of the plants it is necessary to grow plants outdoors under natural conditions for the purpose of seed saving. Much can be done by selection. If you find a plant which is free from disease and unusually free of growth, which sets better or, in short, shows any points of advantage over its neighbors, save the seed from this and plant it outdoors for stock.

The tomato plant will stand a good deal of feeding when in active growth, but of course it can be overdone, especially during the dull, short days, when little or no feeding is necessary. If you have been feeding injudiciously, it would certainly help to encourage the disease and might even be the direct cause of it, but without knowing the conditions more fully I could not say whether it is the cause of all your trouble or not.

WM. SCOTT.

GRAPE VINES UNDER GLASS.

There is no doubt that the most troublesome pest which growers of grapes under glass have to deal with is mealy bug, and therefore every means at command should be used in order to get the vines clear of it, if infected, and to keep them free from it when clean.

It is a debatable point whether or not the removing of the loose bark is beneficial or otherwise, of itself, to grape vines, but there is no questioning the advisability or the necessity of it when mealy bug has found a snug home in its crevices. Then it will be well, after the vines are pruned, to go carefully over them and remove all the loose bark and the bug at the same time, using extra care so as not to penetrate into what may be called the quick of the vine, and being careful, also, not to rub any eyes from the vines.

When this work is done, the vines should be thoroughly gone over with a preparation composed as follows: One pound whale-oil soap, dissolved in one gallon of hot water; four ounces flowers of sulphur; one-half wineglass kerosene. To this, after being thoroughly incorporated, should be added clay and cow manure in sufficient quantity to make the whole of such consistency that, when applied with a soft brush, a coat will adhere to the vines. Out of that coating

PACIFIC COAST.

HAYWARDS, CAL.—H. F. Haeke has started a nursery here, growing roses, fruit trees and bulbs. Mr. Uphill also has started here, propagating wild roses for budding, and fruit trees. The O'Neil nursery, which was the largest here, has been sold to the California Nursery Co., of Niles, which is the next station above Haywards.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Organizing a Club.

A meeting of florists, nurserymen and gardeners was held February 22 for the purpose of launching a florists' club and bringing into closer touch the florists of the city and surrounding country, thus giving each an opportunity to profit by his neighbors' experience.

The meeting was called to order, and O. M. Morris, the genial seedsman of the firm of Morris & Snow, was unanimously elected chairman and Charles E. Morton, secretary; after which we got down to business. The chair appointed Messrs. Reynolds, Bernhart, Gage and Morris a committee of four on permanent organization. He also appointed a committee on membership, composed of Messrs. Reynolds, Gage and Turner.

There is plenty of enthusiasm, and the chair acted wisely in selecting such live ones as the above-mentioned men for the committee on membership. They will, no doubt, bring in a pocketful of applications at our next meeting, two weeks hence.

The following is a list of the members whose names were enrolled at this first meeting: O. M. Morris, H. W. Turner, E. J. Reynolds, A. Elgert, G. F. Martin, P. D. Bernhart, N. C. Snow, E. Kirby, E. A. Clement, William Haerle, H. N. Gage and C. E. Morton.

C. E. MORTON, Sec'y.

Current Comment.

Business continues good, and stock is better and more plentiful as the sun becomes more in evidence. We have had a fine winter, with a greater number of bright days than in any previous winter since I have been on the coast, this being the fifth. Just one light "skiff" of snow and many days free from rain, with some sunshine, make conditions favorable for production of good stock. Already the seeds are beginning to move and people are making garden. During February and March we plant and begin gardening.

Of late a large force has been busy in our parks, pruning roses, and Point Defiance park contains so many roses that each spring, when pruning is in progress, people flock there for cuttings. It was estimated that 5,000 people were supplied with cuttings in a week. People came from Seattle and also from all the small towns for them, and all were supplied. We believe this practice to be a benefit to florists rather than a detriment, for people are with flowers as they are about everything else—always want more and better kinds—and at any rate it all adds to the beauty of our city. E. R. Roberts, our park superintendent, has done much toward the beautifying of our city, and others are thus encouraged to have flowers and to beautify their homes.

Work on the Seymour donated conservatory is at last in progress and it will be located in the beautiful Wright's park. Tacoma parks are already widely known and the addition of this splendid home of glass, for a specially scientific purpose, will be interesting, to say the least. W. W. Seymour generously donated $10,000 for its construction, and before another year we are sure it will be specially interesting to visit, for the florist as well as the general public.

Our mild winter was favorable to growth, and roses are full of swelling buds. The bulbs are beginning to appear above ground and a few crocus are showing color. We are enjoying pleasant weather and have sympathy for those in the east who are in the midst of blizzards and floods and cold.

S. L. HARPER.

The Market.

There are some signs of trade brightening and the weather has been much in our favor for the last week. Bright sunshine and warm nights have unloosened the roses and the carnations and they are much more plentiful than at any time for the last few weeks. Roses are of better color and substance, especially the Maids and Beauties, and the dealers are not having as much trouble to get orders filled as they did have. Carnations, with the exception of Enchantress, are in fair supply. This variety appears to be off crop with most of the growers.

Valley is fairly plentiful and Narcissus poeticus has arrived. Daffodils are not so plentiful and the prices have stiffened somewhat. White narcissi are scarce, as our continued warm, rainy weather opened the entire crop in a few weeks, and they are practically over now. Violets are now at the height of the season. They cost the stores from 75 cents to $1 per dozen bunches. A few Marie Louise are seen, but practically all the trading is done with the single sorts.

Fruit tree blossoms are being used lavishly in window decorating. The crop of wild maidenhair is now at full blast and is a tremendous help to the retailers for use with loose bunches.

Some Dutch hyacinths and single tulips are being used this season, but there does not appear to be as much demand for them as for the daffodils, which have been in better demand this season than ever before.

Various Notes.

John Martin, of Ross Station, is cutting some fine cattleyas and phalaenopsis. Charles Stappenback, Polk street, is using his entire stock.

The gardeners of San Rafael have donated a beautiful specimen of the Colorado blue spruce to Boyd park, in that town.

James Nevin, of Ross Station, will shortly commence the erection of a new rose house. He will force Brides and Maids principally.

The May Seed Co., Market street, has issued a well written and illustrated spring catalogue. This firm reports a good business in the new store. G.

DAFFODILS.

The fact that there has been a heavy demand for daffodil flowers in the San Francisco market this season will induce some of the growers to plant rather largely for another year. The weather has been unusually favorable for everything in the narcissus line, and, barring the fact that several days of warm sunshine had a tendency to open the blossoms in large quantities at one time, there is little to complain of. The public has certainly shown favoritism for this popular flower this year.

A few words about the best selling sorts may be in order now. The earliest variety seen here in quantity is Ard Righ. These were in market as early as Thanksgiving and, although the flower is not as large or the stem as long as some of the other trumpet sorts, it is a good seller. As a commercial variety it is not, however, a strong grower, nor is it prolific in the making of bulbs, but it is early and a good money-maker.

About the same time Golden Spur makes its appearance, and this variety was also used quite extensively for early forcing. This is a heavier grower and a somewhat larger flower. Both of these varieties netted the growers from $4 to $5 per hundred.

Of the later kinds, Princeps seems to be the best in demand, with Trumpet Major as a close second. The latter is not quite so popular, but the flowers keep longer and can be handled easier. Neither of these varieties is forced as much as the first mentioned and most of the stock is grown outside.

The earliest blooms from the outside this season brought $2.50 per hundred and on March 1 about one-half that price. Of the later kinds, Sir Watkin is at its height now and the flowers bring about $1.50 per hundred. This is a popular flower with the retailers, but not with the growers. It is claimed that the bulbs in this neighborhood do not multiply, and the crop is consequently short-lived. Incomparabilis, both single and double, has proven an excellent seller and a money-maker for the growers this season. They have been uniformly long-stemmed and large-flowered. This, by the way, is the only double daffodil that is in any demand. The old Von Sion is not a good variety to grow for market. A few Emperor have made their appearance already and are bringing $1.50 per hundred, with a heavy demand. Bicolor Grandee is the latest variety that is grown here to any extent and is also popular with the dealers. The blooms brought as high as $3 per hundred last season, even at the time when other stock was plentiful, and they bid fair to be in as much demand again this season. G.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYMEN.

Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Vice-Pres., C. M. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The 33d annual convention will be held at Milwaukee, June, 1908.

J. W. MEEK, nurseryman at Columbus, O., was thrown February 17, while breaking a colt, and suffered severe cuts and bruises.

THE constantly increasing demand for the Norway maple is so evident to some that they think the fact can hardly be announced too often.

THE flowering cherries are planted in large numbers nowadays. They are certainly beautiful when in full bloom, and many of them are useful also as shade trees.

THE ailanthus, or tree of heaven, is a quick grower, with graceful tropical-looking foliage. It makes a good shade tree, especially in so far as it stands the smoke and other atmospheric impurities of large cities better than any other tree.

OHIO NURSEYMEN DINE.

The Miami Valley Nurserymen's Association met February 25 at the Phillips House, in Dayton, O. Theodore Densmore, of Tippecanoe City, was chosen president and William M. Scarff, of Yellow Springs, secretary. J. W. McNary, of Dayton, Charles Peters, of Troy, M. F. Barnes, of Hamilton, were chosen as the executive committee. A banquet was served in the evening.

PRUNUS PISSARDI.

Prunus Pissardi is not, perhaps, as brilliant in coloring as some of the Japanese maples are for a few months of the year, but it is in many respects fully as worthy of consideration when intending planters are in need of shrubs or trees of dark red foliage. Prunus Pissardi succeeds well in almost every kind of soil and situation, although it will not thrive well in a too shady place. The foliage is almost purple from the time it unfolds in early summer until winter.

When planted in groups and pruned annually, handsome effects are easily produced with these trees, and likewise, if planted singly they make beautiful and unique lawn specimens. And still again, they are equally well adapted for planting in shrubberies and closely together in hedge form. M.

PRIVET HEDGES.

For sections of the country where California privet will stand the winters, there is nothing to compare with it for quick and satisfactory results in the making of a hedge. Although it may be thought desirable to cut back privet when it is newly planted as a hedge in spring, if the plants are thrifty and thoroughly well furnished with roots and wood buds, there is really no necessity for cutting them back. If quick effect is no object, the hedge will be made stronger if cut back.

When one object of a hedge is to furnish resistance to intruders, it will be well to plant a double row in the trench, but if there is no such object in view, and the only aim is to grow a handsome hedge, one row will answer as well as two. Success with hedges, like success with almost everything else, depends to a great extent on a good beginning, both as to material and preparation. If the hedge is to form a straight line, a trench should be dug to a line with accuracy. M.

NEW ORLEANS.

The New Orleans Horticultural Society met February 20. Owing to the necessity of a large attendance to discuss the plans for the chrysanthemum exhibition, this matter went over to be taken up at a special meeting to be held the first Thursday in March.

J. A. Newsham stated that he purposes to leave for Central America in a few days to collect orchids.

Richard Eichling, grower for Uriah Virgin, exhibited Roman and Italian hyacinths and narcissi, lilies of the valley and calla lilies.

J. A. Newsham also showed fine and extra large calla lilies. Paul Abele, for Abele Bros., exhibited sweet peas grown in the open in winter.

INDIANAPOLIS.

Current Comment.

The weather conditions last week were unfavorable. There was low temperature, with snow or rain, and consequently the cut was below the average. Business continues fairly good, and while the large receptions are missed, funeral orders keep the store men busy. All kinds of bulbous stock are to be had in quantity.

The anticipated trip to Richmond came off February 26 and was a great success. About thirty of the city florists went over and these were joined in Richmond by several from Anderson, New Castle and other places. The party was met at E. T. Grave's greenhouses by Messrs. Hill, Grave, Knopf, Gause and Evans. After inspecting Mr. Grave's greenhouses, the party visited the west branch of the E. G. Hill establishment, the B., K. & B. greenhouses and the Gause greenhouses in rotation. All were greatly pleased with all that was shown them, especially the fine display of Afterglow and Rhea Reid at the E. G. Hill Co.'s. This firm has some seedling carnations that are A1. it certainly showed up well, as did his Lawson-Enchantress. He has a fine light pink called Delight, which seems to be all he claims for it. This will be put on the market in 1910 and all thought the trade will be "de-lighted" with it. After dinner the party paid a visit to the factory of John Evans. E. G. Hill's east place was next visited; also E. Ruch's, and here the trip ended and with it a most pleasant and profitable day. H. Junge and Bert Stanley shone in the role of heroes. E. A. #### WASHINGTON.

There is not much change in business since last writing. Besides the social functions, which come in just before Lent, there has been an unusual demand for funeral work. The funeral of Bishop Satterlee was an exceedingly large one. Wreaths of every description, and clusters of every conceivable shape were ordered. The entire chancel of the church was massed with flowers. The only flowers used on the casket were in a large cross made solid of valley. The

The work seems to be pretty well distributed.

GRAND RAPIDS.

Current Comment.

During February we experienced some as severe weather as is ever handed out—snow storms, blizzards, way below zero, combinations of rain, snow and sleet, floods and anything else you can mention. Little damage was done beyond the smashing in of a few rafter bars, unable to stand the weight of snow. Among those who suffered most were Henry Smith and Charles Chadwick.

Business has been fair, with a spurt at St. Valentine's day. Shipping has been brisk, but orders are, as a rule, not as large as for the corresponding month last year. Last February demand was far in excess of supply. There have been times when roses have been scarce, but otherwise stock has been plentiful. The great glut has been bulbous stock. Last season you could not get enough, but this time every florist in town was going to have enough, "you bet." One firm alone is growing a total of 300,000 bulbs. It is doubtful if the initial cost of the bulbs will be realized. Next season they will be grown in more subdued quantities.

Large receptions and weddings have been conspicuous by their absence, while funeral work has been as plentiful as heretofore. In summing up, the aggregate is fairly satisfactory, with no real cause of complaint, yet business is not as good as last season.

Lilies are beginning to come in and the prospects are for the usual Easter quantity. If we could only get multiflorums free of disease and to come true to name, what a blessing! As it is, with disease and the mixture of varieties one gets under the name multiflorum, the loss amounts to anywhere from forty to sixty per cent. G. F. C.

TORONTO.

Trade has not been good in the city, with the exception of a few social events. Many of the florists are complaining of the lack of what is usually considered transient trade, and they have to depend on the larger orders they get for weddings and receptions.

Carnations, violets and bulb stock are coming in plentifully. Roses of all kinds are scarce, especially white and Beauties.

D. J. Sinclair is now getting his premises in shape after the fire which consumed the office and shipping room February 18. D. J.

HUTCHINSON, KAN.—The Hutchinson Floral Co. has removed its downtown office to its greenhouses, at the corner of Band and Poplar streets.

The garden committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society recently visited the greenhouses of H. A. Jahn, of New Bedford, to see his carnations. A white seedling which is largely planted and which has been shown at Boston and other shows, was looking fine. It is the most wonderfully prolific white the committee had seen. The flower is large, full and the stem ideal.—Boston News-letter in Nov. 28, 1907, issue of THE FLORISTS' REVIEW.

CARNATION CUTTINGS

We are in unusually good position to supply exceptionally well-rooted, healthy stock. We have such a large quantity of flowering plants that we propagate only from heel cuttings from flowering shoots. Our cuttings are rooted in light, sunny, airy houses, and we are sure will satisfy the most critical buyer.

A prominent carnation grower writes: "You seem to be the only firm in the business that knows how to pack stock and have it reach the buyer in good condition, and I have always found your cuttings cheaper than the same varieties from others at much lower figures."

While our prices may not always be the cheapest, we certainly can give, quality considered, as good value as, if not better than, is obtainable anywhere.

We offer also BEACON and RED CHIEF, from sand, $6.00 per 100; $50.00 per 1000. From soil, $7.50 per 100; $60.00 per 1000. Also VICTORY, MELODY, WHITE PERFECTION, from sand, $4.00 per 100; $35.00 per 1000. From soil, $6.00 per 100; $45.00 per 1000. VARIEGATED LAWSON, WHITE LAWSON and RED LAWSON, from sand, $3.00 per 100; $25.00 per 1000. From soil, $4.00 per 100; $35.00 per 1000. We can also supply WINONA and AFTERGLOW, $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

Buyers will find transplanted stock offered from soil well worth the difference in price.

CINCINNATI

The Market.

Business was on the slow side last week. The city demand went down and had it not been for the shipping trade, which was quite good, the wholesale houses might just as well have shut up. The supply of stock was heavy, too, and as the principal call was for funeral orders, white flowers were the only ones which sold out clean.

Carnations are coming in heavily. It is good stock, but the price is low. Roses, too, are abundant and of good quality. They are selling out closer and at better prices than carnations, but there is room for improvement. Some fine Dutch hyacinths go right well, also tulips. Valley has had a fairly good run. Both Harrisii and callas go nicely and at good prices. Violets are in large supply and move slowly.

The fakers are having their innings now and are selling large quantities of stock on the street. Besides the old-time fakers, who have been with us for years, we are beginning to have quite a number of Greeks. They sell at any old price and seem to thrive, though it is a puzzle to us how they make any profit.

The present week is starting out as though the business were trying to redeem itself. There is quite a rush and stock is cleaned up right well. It is hard to predict much, though. Lent is upon us, and if the supply of stock continues as heavy as it has been the last few weeks, there will be no chance to boost prices. But with a good Easter business in prospect we have nothing to fear.

Various Notes.

B. P. Critchell is out again, but is obliged to walk with a cane. He suffers severely at times with his right leg, but hopes soon to be well again.

George & Allan are in with new valley, which is fine, though of course the foliage is scanty. Their Dutch hyacinths are good, also.

The writer was confined to his home for two weeks with a severe case of tonsillitis and other complications, but is glad to be out and at business again.

C. J. OHMER.

PLEASE renew my subscription for another year. I would feel like locking up the place and quitting business if I had to do without the REVIEW.—A. L. VAN OSTRAND, Abilene, Kan.

ST. PAUL.

The Florists' Club.

The Twin City Florists' and Gardeners' Club held its first field day at the seed and greenhouse establishment of L. L. May & Co., February 26. The new concrete warehouse, a model of its kind, was thoroughly inspected. The methods of putting up the seed, filling orders, etc., were thoroughly gone over and explained and the details of the business shown to the visitors. The furnace is fed automatically by a Murphy stoker, Illinois screenings being used, which cost, laid down in the bin, about $2 per ton. A sidetrack runs to the warehouse, where all shipments are received and all out freight loaded. The steam for heating is conveyed in conduits under two streets to the greenhouses. In the greenhouses stock was found in nice shape. A general line of roses, carnations, bulbs, Easter plants, etc., is grown here, as well as a full line of bedding plants. In carnations, Enchantress easily leads all others, while Killarney does the best in the rose section.

The committee appointed to confer with the state fair managers reported; two new members were added to it and instructions were given to continue the work. The state fair board has offered to prepare the beds for an outside display of bedding plants, to take care of them during the summer and to allow the florists to prepare the premium list.

Various Notes.

The Minnesota Rose Society will hold its winter meeting this week in St. Paul. O. J. Olson will read a paper on "The Care and Preparation of Flowers for Exhibition."

W. S. Hall, of Osage, Iowa, and Frank Berry, of Stillwater, were recent callers.

Theodore Wirth is putting in some hard work to secure members for the Society of American Florists and hopes to secure ten or twelve life members before he stops. X. Y. Z.

EXETER, N. H.

After four months' illness, W. S. Perkins is able to be about again.

Mr. Freystedt, salesman for Welch Bros., was in town last week with a new line of goods, visiting local florists.

Business this winter has been very good, considering the times.

The stock at both G. W. Hilliard's and W. S. Perkins' greenhouses is looking fine.

Orthaniel Churchill has reentered the employ of W. S. Perkins, after studying the trade in various parts of the country. P.

The new concrete warehouse, a model of its kind, was thoroughly inspected. The methods of putting up the seed, filling orders, etc., were thoroughly gone over and explained and the details of the business shown to the visitors. The furnace is fed automatically by a Murphy stoker, Illinois screenings being used, which cost, laid down in the bin, about $2 per ton. A sidetrack runs to the warehouse, where all shipments are received and all out freight loaded. The steam for heating is conveyed in conduits under two streets to the greenhouses. In the greenhouses stock was found in nice shape. A general line of roses, carnations, bulbs, Easter plants, etc., is grown here, as well as a full line of bedding plants. In carnations, Enchantress easily leads all others, while Killarney does the best in the rose section.

The committee appointed to confer with the state fair managers reported; two new members were added to it and instructions were given to continue the work. The state fair board has offered to prepare the beds for an outside display of bedding plants, to take care of them during the summer and to allow the florists to prepare the premium list.

Various Notes.

The Minnesota Rose Society will hold its winter meeting this week in St. Paul. O. J. Olson will read a paper on "The Care and Preparation of Flowers for Exhibition."

W. S. Hall, of Osage, Iowa, and Frank Berry, of Stillwater, were recent callers.

Theodore Wirth is putting in some hard work to secure members for the Society of American Florists and hopes to secure ten or twelve life members before he stops. N. Y. Z.

EXETER, N. H.

After four months' illness, W. S. Perkins is able to be about again.

Mr. Freystedt, salesman for Welch Bros., was in town last week with a new line of goods, visiting local florists.

Business this winter has been very good, considering the times.

The stock at both G. W. Hilliard's and W. S. Perkins' greenhouses is looking fine.

BUFFALO.

The Market.

A flood of flowers piled into the Buffalo market the last ten days. Lack of trade cannot be given as the cause, for it has been very good, but in spite of that fact thousands of flowers went to waste. Bulb stock brought low prices and sales in the different stores were the result. Carnations were about as low as they could possibly get and sold on Saturday at a retail price of 15 cents per dozen; old stock, of course, but it is sometimes hard to tell the people that it is old. On the other hand, the man selling the stock sells it as perfectly fresh. Who gets the benefit? Nobody. Lilies brought any price from 6 cents to 12½ cents; and lots to spare at the lowest figure. With these conditions before Lent, what will we do afterwards?

Various Notes.

Miss Skinner, for many years with the J. H. Rebstock Co., was married last week to a Detroit man. We might add that Miss Skinner started with Mr. Rebstock when she was a young girl.

February 24 the committee of the Buffalo Florists' Club arranged a bowling party at the Palace alleys. Four alleys were engaged for the event, and before the members stopped coming there were enough for ten alleys. The crowd was the largest gathering ever gotten together and the result was a splendid time. All enjoyed themselves, from the youngest to the oldest. Several large scores were made, the best of the evening being done by Wallace Eiss. Without a doubt Mr. Eiss will carry off all honors at the convention next summer. He has the earmarks of a bowler and the marks were shown on his linen collar before the evening was over. J. H. Rebstock and Lady Keitch were next in line for high honors. President Neubeck was much in evidence and cheered the many strikes and spares made during the evening. The next meeting of the club will be held March 6. Don't forget the date, men, and be sure to come.

We were visited last week by three distinct styles of traveling men, namely, Skidelsky, Rosnosky and O'Neil. Much could be said of the three, but lack of space prevents our doing so. R. A. S.

CLAREMORE, OKLA.—At J. F. Donald's vegetable establishment one house, 24x86, is at present used for lettuce. It is heated with hot water. His first crop from this house, he says, cleared $134.62. His second crop was not so profitable, on account of damping off, but his third crop promises well.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

Market conditions remain about the same as at previous writing, heavy shipments being received daily, with no great call for any particular kind of stock. The quality of flowers of all kinds is of the best, and one can safely say that more than half received are sold far under normal prices.

The cut of roses has increased. They are of fine color and bring from 4 cents to 10 cents. Carnations list from 1 cent to 3 cents. Callas are fine, and sell at from $1 to $1.50 per dozen. Bulb stock of all kinds is coming in heavily and is hard to move at any price.

Various Notes.

The west side retailers had a glorious time Saturday, February 29. Most of the stores were having carnation sales, selling them at 15 cents per dozen and less. This is a most unheard-of condition at this time of the year.

The J. M. Gasser Co. is sending in a fine cut of roses these days. The Killarney, Brides and Maids are exceptionally fine.

Westman & Getz report a fine week's business, having used quantities of the best of stock.

The Ohio Floral Co. used large quantities of flowers at the opening of the Dime Savings Bank, which opened its new quarters in the Williamson building.

A visit to the greenhouses of D. S. Livingston, on Crawford road, found everything in fine shape. A bench of primroses was especially fine, as well as a lot of bedding plants, of which he grows a great quantity.

Visitor: S. S. Skidelsky.

ALBANY, N. Y.

The second annual banquet of the Albany Florists' Club was held at the Hotel Belvedere February 25. Many out-of-town visitors were present. The toastmaster of the evening was John A. Howe, Jr., who rendered several of his inimitable recitations. James Karins, of Dreer's, who has just returned from the Pacific coast, also spoke. Fred A. Danker spoke on business prospects, and William C. King, a former president, was heard from.

WELLSVILLE, N. Y.

The Wellsville Cut Flower Co. has a scarlet crimson carnation which was raised by A. E. Boyer, and which has been given the name Claribel Worth. The flower is three and one-half inches, and the calyx nonbursting. It is the result of a cross of Estelle and Maceo, and is in its fourth year. The stem is described as long and wiry, and Mr. Boyer says it is one of the kind that is easy to grow. He finds it one of his most productive sorts and gets a good crop for Christmas, with 52 degrees night temperature. Stock of the variety is being worked up with the intention of introducing it in 1910.

ST. CHARLES, ILL.—Henry Swaby, who has for some time been carrying on a successful business in truck gardening, has now purchased materials for the erection of a greenhouse, 30x130, which will be used chiefly for carnations, though other flowers, as well as lettuce and some other vegetables, will also be grown.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Business is not exactly rushing; still, everyone seems to have enough to do to keep out of mischief. Much blooming stock is seen at the different stores and meets with a steady demand. There have been no large wedding decorations of late, but a number of small jobs have kept the trade busy.

Roses clean up well. The price ranges from 4 cents to 10 cents. The quality is good. Some fine La Detroit are attracting much attention. Carnations are still much too plentiful. This has brought the price down considerably, besides encouraging the fakers. Most of the carnations are of good quality. The different bulbous stock is plentiful. Smilax, as well as other greens, meets with a good demand for weddings, etc.

Various Notes.

Miss Gentlemen, who is in charge of George Leadley's store, was kept quite busy last week with several small decorations.

A number of 25-foot evergreens, with balls of earth weighing several tons, are being moved about six miles from E. Ferrand & Sons' nurseries.

The death of Henry F. Rauss is reported in the obituary column.

The appointment of Albert Pochelon as state vice-president of the S. A. F., for eastern Michigan, meets with the hearty approval of all who are acquainted with him. Mr. Pochelon is always enthusiastic about anything pertaining to the trade.

Assistant Park Commissioner William Dilger entertained a number of his friends of the Harmonie Bowling Club at a supper at Belle Isle last week.

The Kenneth Anderson Manufacturing Co., of this city, reports a good sale on Revere hose. This hose is giving good satisfaction.

S. S. Skidelsky, who is in town, reports business as being satisfactory. His best selling varieties of carnations have been Winsor, White Enchantress and Beacon. He was much pleased to note that B. Schroeter has a good crop of cuttings in the sand. Over 20,000 cuttings are about to be lifted.

Greenhouse Heating.

USE OF A REDUCING VALVE.

Will you please give us some information about a reducing steam valve. Does it save fuel? We are heating two dwellings with the same boiler with which we heat our greenhouses. As we now operate the plant, we have separate lines for the dwellings. The condensation from the greenhouses is returned to the boiler with Morehead traps, but the condensation from the dwellings goes to waste, because, if put on the same line with the greenhouses, the pressure is not equal; therefore the greenhouses force the water into the dwellings. Would a reducing valve overcome that, so we could bring all the condensation back into the boiler?
S. T. H.

I do not think you can use a reducing valve to accomplish what you desire. These valves are chiefly useful when employed on high pressure steam lines from which low pressure heating is to be worked. I judge from what you say that your difficulty can be entirely overcome by carrying a small independent return from the dwelling to the hot well from which the trap draws its supply.
L. C. C.

CAPACITY OF BOILER.

I have a boiler sixty inches in diameter and sixteen feet long, containing fifty 4-inch flues. Will this boiler economically heat, by steam, seven houses 20x160 feet and five houses 20x140 feet, in the climate of New Mexico? The houses will be connected and will be seven feet high at the side walls and thirteen feet at the ridge. One end of each house will be glass to within three feet of the ground, and the side walls of the outside houses will have four feet of glass. The houses are intended chiefly for carnations.
B. H. I.

Yes, I think the boiler in question has sufficient capacity to carry your houses at a temperature of 50 degrees. I believe, however, you would have a more satisfactory heating plant if you would use two forty horse-power boilers instead of the one ninety horse-power. Much of the time one forty or fifty horse-power boiler would do your work, and when extra heat was needed the second boiler could be put into commission. Such a plan would be more economical of fuel than the use of a single large boiler.

TWO CARNATION HOUSES.

We have an ordinary steam boiler which is four feet long and contains twenty-eight 3-inch flues, with the fire-box immediately under the boiler. Would this heat two carnation houses, each 18x80 feet, with one glass gable in each? We want to heat with water. Here in Texas we seldom have weather lower than 20 degrees above zero. We figure on using two overhead flows and six returns under the benches in each house, all of 2-inch pipe, because we can get this size very cheap. Would this be economical, or would it be better to get 3-inch pipe for the flows?
B. F. C.

I judge that it would be best to place 2-inch returns and one 2-inch flow in

PIPING IN PENNSYLVANIA.

I intend to build two greenhouses, 20x70 feet each, five feet high at the sides and with the roof three-quarter pitch. The houses will run east and west. The wall on the north side will be concrete, the middle wall open and the south wall-glass three feet from the top. On the west end a shed will be built extending the full width of the two houses. I wish to heat with hot water. My boiler is a ten horse-power, upright flue boiler, used for steam. The boiler-house will be at the northwest corner.

Now, what size of main should I run from the boiler through the shed? From this I wish to run the piping along the side walls and middle partition wall. I have a quantity of 1½-inch pipe which I wish to use as returns. On the north wall I have a 2½-inch pipe which I wish to use as a flow. How many 1½-inch returns must I have on the north wall? If I place a 2½-inch flow also on the south wall and on each side of the middle partition, how many 1½-inch returns will be needed in each case? These flows are all to branch off from the main which will run through the shed. The returns would all enter a main return, to connect with the boiler again. What would be the size of this main return? I wish to maintain a temperature of 50 degrees. The outside temperature seldom goes below zero. I will not have raised benches.

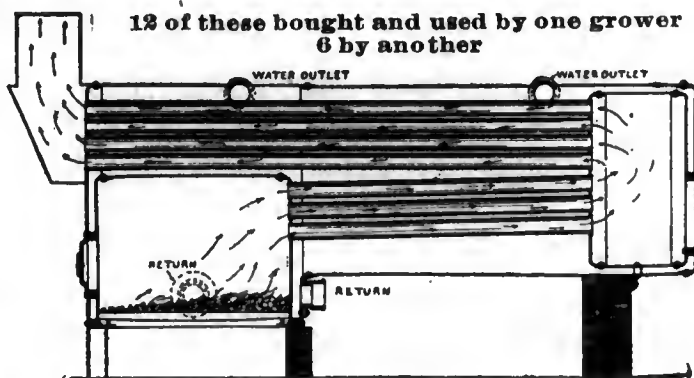

J. W. H.

In my judgment you would do well to modify your whole plan, if the area at your disposal and the lay of the land will permit. Run the houses north and south. Place the boiler-house at the north end and center it on the partition between the two houses. For all houses save rose houses or large shed houses, the even-span north and south house gets the most light during the winter months. To heat these houses with hot water, use a 2-inch flow and eight 1½-inch returns on each wall of the houses, i. e., four 2-inch flows from the boiler direct to the four walls on which coils are to be arranged. If this should be arranged for, carry a 3-inch flow direct to each house and divide it to supply the two 2-inch supply pipes for the coils of 1½-inch returns.

Horticultural Society Meeting.

The largest attendance of the season marked the meeting of the Newport Horticultural Society, Tuesday evening, February 25. In the absence of President John T. Allan, James Robertson was in the chair. All routine business was dispensed with, and in opening Mr. Robertson introduced Robert Cameron, of the Harvard University Botanical Garden, as the speaker of the evening. Mr. Cameron took for subjects, "Annals and Biennials," and read a paper, which, for scope and careful preparation, excelled anything attempted for the benefit of the members of this society in a long time. It was full of information clothed in plain language.

The address was well received, and at its close Mr. Cameron was accorded a very hearty vote of thanks. Messrs. MacLellan, McLeish, James J. Sullivan and Joseph Gibson spoke briefly, touching upon certain prominent points brought into view in the reading of Mr. Cameron's paper.

John Marshall, of By-the-Sea Greenhouses, exhibited a number of seedling carnations, for one of which he was awarded the society's silver medal. This carnation is undoubtedly remarkable in color (bright red), size of bloom and length and strength of stem, and will, if I mistake not, be heard from in the future.

State of Trade.

Trade is still brisk here, with plenty of stock. Carnations were heavily in evidence last week, but it is the first time this season we have been overstocked and it will only be for a short time, as a great many of the growers had heavy crops in just at the same time, and no doubt there will not be too many in a few days, after the heaviest cuts are out of the way. Bulbous stock moves slowly at present, especially tulips and Romans. Paper Whites and daffs move nicely, but prices are low for first grade stock. Roses are coming in fine and of good color, stems and foliage. Violets have moved nicely for the last two weeks, as several large affairs have taken large quantities. Cut plumosus and Sprengeri are still scarce on this market; not nearly enough to go around.

Various Notes.

The Florists' Club was entertained February 25 by Mrs. Griswold, of Worthington, O. She gave a fine supper, after which there was dancing and card playing. She is a member of our club and not able to attend our meetings, so took this means of meeting with us and entertaining us at the same time. There was a good attendance and all reported a fine time.

The bowlers got together February 28 and there were some good scores. The highest were by J. McKellar and C. A. Roth, the first with an average of 165½ and the latter 163 average. The boys are arranging to bowl every Friday night and everyone is improving, so we will soon be in shape.

Albert Knopf, of the Franklin Park Floral Co., has been compelled to break away from business for the present and go south for his health. All the craft hope he will soon return much improved.

The Greeks are in sight again, selling carnations at 35 cents per dozen. Some of the stores have been selling at the same price, but it is a question whether it is a wise thing to do. J. M.

MAKING UP BASKETS.

Baskets of Flowers.

In a former article on baskets I divided them into three classes, namely, plant baskets, cut-flower baskets and a combination of both.

While I consider it a good plan to have a few nicely made up plant baskets standing around in the store, this would not be practical with cut flower baskets. But some baskets adapt themselves nicely to hold fiber or glass vases, while others have a tin or zinc lining. A nice bunch of suitable flowers can be put into such a basket, and it will not only help to decorate your store, but will aid in selling the flowers by attracting special attention to them.

Small glass vases especially made for this purpose, or the test tubes used by chemists, can also be held in place in the basket with moss. Fill these with water and put your flowers into them. This idea you can also carry out in a table decoration, when using some flower that is apt to wilt.

Many Styles of Baskets.

There are countless shapes and colors of baskets and each one can be used to good effect in one way or another. Some baskets are made of fancy material or are nicely colored. These I would cover as little as possible. Again, some baskets of useful shape are of an unattractive color, or have become faded from exposure. In this case cover the basket well with the green and flowers. Others are left in the plain straw color; these should be pretty well covered, unless otherwise specified.

Uses of Baskets.

The uses to which baskets can be put are nearly as many as there are styles and shapes. Take, for instance, a table to be used as a serving table only. A suitable basket in the center makes a dainty and simple decoration. For such an occasion I would use a high handled basket, unless there is a dome or fixture which hangs low over the table. If the table is a large one, place four small baskets, corresponding with the center one, near the corners of the table. In case you wish to decorate a table at which the guests are to be seated, a low basket without a handle can be used. A small basket placed at each plate makes pretty favors. These should, of course, be quite small and should be filled with some small flower, as sweet peas, daisies, valley, etc.

Store openings also create almost unlimited opportunities for the use of baskets. Here is a chance to make a good profit, for in most instances the making up of the basket is left to the florist.

A medium sized basket of choice flowers makes a suitable gift to a friend.

A basket of suitable color, filled with yellow roses, daffodils, yellow mums, etc., and tied with a ribbon to match, makes an appropriate gift for a golden wedding celebration.

A basket of plain design, filled mostly with white flowers and surmounted by a dove, will be appropriate for a funeral. The dove is, of course, not necessary, but at the same time it looks well.

I could go on in this way and name many more chances for using baskets, but do not wish to tire my readers.

Flowers to Use.

Not only the popular flowers of the day, but any flower available, can be worked up nicely into a basket. Of course the color and arrangement depend on the occasion for which the basket is to be used, as also does the style of the basket.

With the foregoing hints on shapes, place with some string in such a way that the string will not show after the basket is finished. Cover the moss with fern leaves.

Now we are ready for the peas. Stem them either to toothpicks or match sticks. After you have a sufficient quantity stemmed, commence making the basket. Make the arrangement as airy as possible; this is easy if you have some of the peas stemmed longer than the others. Stick the short ones into the moss and then follow with the long ones scattered in between. See to it that some of the flowers hang a little over the sides of the basket. Wind a nice piece of smilax, not too heavy, around the handle and the basket is finished.

If you wish to elaborate a little on the basket, you can run the flowers up one side of the handle. Begin a little to one side of the top of the handle, with just one or two peas. Tie them to the handle the same as if you were starting to wind a garland. As you work along downward, use more peas. Have them twine all around the handle. A few extra long sweet peas should be put in between those already in the basket, on the styles, color, etc., in mind, we will now proceed to make up a few baskets.

Making Up a Basket.

We will suppose that our basket is to be used as the centerpiece on a reception table. Our order calls for sweet peas. As stated before, a basket on a serving table, where the guests are not to be seated, can have a high handle. Pick out a basket about ten inches across and of a color that will harmonize nicely with the pink peas. Fill it with sphagnum moss; have the moss about even with the top of the basket. Tie the moss into side on which the handle has been trimmed, so as to have a tapering effect. Use a little of the same green between the peas on the handle as you have used in the basket. So much for the sweet pea basket.

Baskets for Funerals.

A basket for a funeral can be made up in various ways. Use either all white flowers or white and some other delicate color, as the particular case or customer may demand. Of course, almost any shape of basket can be used, but some of the ordinary shapes are to be preferred. What is known as the French shape is good; this is the style of basket that comes mostly in the plain wicker. Plateaus are also good to use. If you wish to use a dove on a plateau, it is a good plan to tie the small wooden base, on which the dove comes mounted, right in with the moss.

You will find it necessary to wire some of the flowers to get a nice, airy effect in most work, and this is especially true in a funeral basket, as you will want some of the finer flowers, such as valley, hyacinths, etc., to show above the other flowers.

Baskets for Various Occasions.

Baskets for openings of stores or hotels, or for presentation at some political gathering, should be made as showy as possible. In the first place, if none has been selected, use a large, showy, inexpensive basket, or one that does not sell readily. An old basket can also be made to look like new if a mat is tied around it, with a bow on one side and some green on the handle.

Fill the basket with sphagnum moss, tying it into place with some string. Cover the moss with ferns. Next pick out from your stock on hand an assortment of flowers. For instance, if the finished basket is to bring $7.50, allow 50 cents to 75 cents for a ribbon; then deduct what the basket is worth, and the remainder can be allowed for the flowers. It is hardly necessary to figure much for your work on a job of this sort, for you should be making a good profit on the flowers.

If there are any weak-stemmed flowers in the lot, stiffen them with some wires. Mix the colors up well and have some of the flowers projecting out over the others. For a basket of this sort it is better to pick out some flowers that are pretty well advanced, or some of which you may have an oversupply.

Combination Baskets.

Combination baskets are baskets in which both flowers and plants are to be of flowers used, of course, depend on the occasion for which the basket is intended.

A Boston fern can also be trimmed up in this way: First cover the pot with either a mat or some other cover; then stick some flowers in between the leaves. Some low Scottii ferns treated in this way will make a pretty and inexpensive centerpiece. HUGO SCHROETER.

ENCOURAGE THE GARDENERS.

This is the season of the year at which every florist who does a local trade in plants for bedding, window-boxes, etc., and everyone who deals in hardy perennials, shrubs and trees, should bestir himself to put life into the local civic improvement body. There is no movement which means so much to florists as that looking to the beautification of cities.

And in this work the florist should practice what he preaches, as in the illustration on page 5. This is from a photograph made at Galesburg, Ill., where the establishment of I. L. Pillsbury occupies a prominent corner. Mr. Pillsbury is a member of the Galesburg Improvement Society and does all he can to keep it busy, for he says it stimulates and encourages the use and purchase of flowers and plants. As a means of setting an example, Mr. Pillsbury last season made the plantations on his corner lot shown in the picture. The central bed was cannas and thirty feet in diameter. The plants used in the other beds were Salvia splendens, two varieties of coleus, S. A. Nutt geraniums, and two varieties of alternanthera. The display cost something for stock and for attention, but it was the cheapest means of advertising, as well as the most effective, that Mr. Pillsbury ever found. The improvement society had a competition for prizes during the summer and so effective was the Pillsbury display that the committee of awards gave it honorable mention in reporting awards to the newspapers.

Well kept grounds are not only a standing advertisement for the stock a florist has to sell, but the power of example is great and no florist should permit his

THE ARGENTINE ANT.

I wish to call the attention of your readers, and particularly that of all florists and nurserymen in the southern states, to the danger which threatens their business in the introduction of the Argentine ant. This insect has already become established at New Orleans and vicinity, and while it is not known how far north it will thrive in the open air, it certainly is greatly to be feared as a pest in northern greenhouses. It is very injurious to many cultivated flowers and ornamentals, destroying the calyxes, while in the south it threatens the fruit-growing industry, as it feeds upon fruit buds as well as fruit.

The Argentine ant is also a fearful pest in the household, and indirectly favors the development of many species of coccidæ and aphididæ.

Its dissemination in shipments of groceries, foodstuffs and household goods cannot well be prevented, but precaution should be taken against its introduction in greenhouse plants and nursery stock. It is reported, upon reliable authority, that in many greenhouses in the infested region every plant has more or less of the ants upon it, and serious losses may result if greenhouse plants are purchased in New Orleans or vicinity. L. #### USES SOLID BEDS.

C. L. Van Meter, at Monticello, Iowa, has a modern establishment of six connected houses, each 120 feet long. The plant has all been built within two years and is thoroughly up-to-date. As is natural in a city of this size, the business is a general one, a great variety of stock being grown for local consumption, but 5,000 carnation plants are blooming. Solid beds are used and the results have been so satisfactory that Mr. Van Meter says he recommends them for trial by everyone similarly situated. A part of the beds are confined by cement slabs eighteen inches high, which are filled in with cinders to within eight inches of the top. On these beds the grower says the plants do fully as well as on benches and the flowers are of better quality and keep longer.

Mr. Van Meter says business has been first rate this winter and he is looking for the biggest spring business on record. The farmers all through Iowa have plenty of money and the towns with farmer trade are more prosperous than ever.

A BUILDER'S PROBLEMS.

In the near future I intend building a new range, and as I am not pleased with my present arrangement I wish to make some changes, but with your advice.

I like solid benches, but I see that raised benches make better and earlier crops, so I have been thinking of putting down two or three hot water or steam pipes on the ground, for 6-foot benches. Then I would put twelve inches of cinders on top of the pipes for drainage, and then six inches of soil for the plants, which would be carnations and roses. The pipes might be incased in 3-inch or 4-inch glazed sewer pipes, but I imagine that a reasonable amount of bottom heat will start plants off earlier. It is too hot here, in Kentucky, and we cannot house our carnations as early as in the north. Has this plan ever been tried?

I read in one of Henderson's books that experiments were being made with used. There remains little to say, however, about the making of these, as the subject has been pretty well covered in the preceding notes.

Arrange your plants in the basket first, keeping them in place with sphagnum moss. Leave the plants in pots, if possible. Stick some green into the moss and then the flowers. The color and variety ground glass to shade greenhouses, and with success. Why is it not tried now? At least, I have never seen any.

My present houses run east and west, and it gets so hot in the middle of the day, even with all ventilators open, that we often have 90 degrees. So I am thinking of using larger glass, 16x18 or 16x24, and running the houses north and south. What do you think of this, for the Kentucky climate? G. O. K.

Solid benches, such as you have planned, have been tried frequently; in fact, I have had them under my personal care, and in every case have had poor results as compared with table benches. This burying of the radiating pipes is a great waste of material and, besides, is not good for the plants.

Solid benches for summer blooming are very desirable, as the roots can get down into the cool soil, but when results are wanted during winter, table benches are more suitable, as the heat can be controlled and diverted to where it is wanted.

During the heat of summer it is always best to shade carnations, but this shade must be temporary and of such a nature that it can be easily removed. Hence the discontinuance of ground glass for this purpose. Roses need no shading; plenty of fresh air and abundance of water during the summer will be ample protection.

For roses and carnations, crops which are most valuable in winter, east and west houses—that is, houses having a southern exposure—are certainly preferable. For bedding stock and some kinds of pot plants, north and south houses are suitable. RIBES.

ENGLISH IVY.

It is surprising how varied the usefulness of English ivy is. The mistaken idea that it is mainly serviceable as a climbing plant under favorable conditions is fast losing credence, and the sterling merits it possesses for various forms of outdoor decoration are becoming fully recognized. Masses of vegetation are desirable where conditions make them well nigh impossible; for instance, underneath the shade of large trees, where even grass will not grow. When soil has been prepared and young ivy out of 3½-inch pots is planted quite closely in such places the effect is pleasing. There may be occasion to plant a narrow border along a walk or roadway, where the nature of the surroundings are such as to preclude flowering plants, as well as plants of upright habits of growth. For such purposes English ivy is admirably suited. In sunken gardens and in connection with lily ponds, the extensive use of English ivy will not fail to give satisfactory results. M.

AN APPEAL TO THE SHIPPERS.

In regard to N. E. De Golier's remarks, which appeared in the REVIEW of February 27, on the subject of "The Special Plant Rate," may I be allowed to give my experience? As the REVIEW has done so much for the trade in general, the publishers will doubtless welcome such suggestions as will help to improve shipping methods, for the welfare of both the shipper and the buyer. As a man in the florists' business, with a small plant and considerable trade, selling much more than I can grow, I am compelled to get two-thirds of my stock by express, and there is, as Mr. De Golier says, continual trouble on account of overcharges. For example, I will give my experience during the last month, only to show how the express companies treat the buyer, or receiver, of the plant shipments. During the twenty-nine days of February I received eleven shipments of plants and bulbs, from New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, St. Louis, Boston, Springfield, Ill.; Springfield, O., and Little Silver, N. J., and nine out of the eleven were overcharged. Only two shipments, one from Philadelphia and the other from Springfield, O., were correctly charged. The driver himself remarked, when delivering the shipment from Springfield, O., to which the sender had attached a label showing the weight and express charges: "This is the only correct way to bill shipments. But," he added, "the express company does not like it very well, for good reasons."

Now, when you consider that the driver or delivery-man cannot reduce overcharges, then the only way to do is to get a receipt for your charges paid, with the number of pounds, class of goods, etc., and then go to the express company personally and get your return of over-charge. This, in the busy season, occurring once or twice a week, makes considerable extra trouble. I, for one, have resolved that in the future I will buy where I am sure of correct shipment.

I am writing this in the hope that the wholesale firms, when they see how much unnecessary trouble we retailers have, will take action accordingly, by adopting and filling out a label similar to the one printed in the REVIEW of February 27, page 78. MICHAEL MANDL.

FACTS ABOUT THRIPS.

We would like to know something about thrips. Perhaps the entomologist at some of the experiment stations can give us the information. Where do the thrips lay their eggs? How long does it take them to hatch, and how long to mature after hatching? W. B. D.

Thrips lays its eggs beneath the epidermis of the green parts of plants. On the rose and carnation the eggs are laid in the inner surface of the calyx, usually before the flower opens. The growing shoots of the carnation are also places sought for in depositing eggs. The eggs are deposited anywhere in the tender green tissue of vegetable plants. The eggs are colorless, bean-shaped, delicate structures and may be seen as light-colored spots in the dark green color of thin leaves, if held up to bright light. So far as known to the writer, the number of eggs laid by a single female thrips has been observed only for one species, in which case the number was fifty to sixty.

The time required for the hatching of the eggs varies with the species of thrips and with the weather conditions. In the case of Thrips tabaci, or onion thrips, which has been found to be the most common species of thrips in greenhouses at this season, the time required varies from four to seven days. In hot, dry summer weather outdoors, the eggs hatch in from three and one-half to four days. The life history of other species is being worked out and will be published later.

The above-named species matures in about four weeks in greenhouses in winter, while in summer only sixteen days are required. The larvæ, upon hatching, push their way to the surface through the slit made for the reception of the egg. The young insects resemble the adults in general form, in their mouth parts and feeding habits. There is a pupal stage of about a week in greenhouses, during which the thrips are inactive and feed but little if at all. During this period they seek a hiding place and emerge as adult insects.

It is impossible, therefore, to destroy the eggs, and the rapidity with which they hatch means that whatever method of destruction is employed should be repeated at very short intervals of time.

The undersigned would be glad to receive specimens of thrips causing damage to any greenhouse crop, or to render any service he can consistently with his duties in the thrips experiments now in progress. Mail specimens to Urbana, Ill.

LILIUM CANDIDUM FOR EASTER.

I should like to make an inquiry in regard to Lilium candidum. We have in a frame outdoors, covered with leaves, a lot of fine bulbs of Lilium candidum and, on uncovering today, find that they have started, are about three inches in height and appear to be in extra fine condition. Could these be brought into bloom for Easter by putting in pots and placing in a house of about 50 degrees of temperature?

G. A. K.

Your lilies will be much too late for Easter. To have them in flower by April 19, buds should now be visible. Such plants in a night temperature of 50 to 52 degrees will be in season. We would advise growing your plants along for Memorial day trade. There is always an active demand for such flowers at that time. In a temperature of 50 degrees they would flower by the end of May.
W. N. C.

DRACAENA BRONZE BEAUTY.

The illustration on page 7 shows a specimen plant of Dracaena Bronze Beauty, which is one of the varieties raised at the establishment of W. A. Manda, South Orange, N. J. It is the result of a cross of Dracaena Imperialis and D. Youngii. It is a strong grower, the leaves oval, or oblong, of leathery texture, bronze in color, the centers of matured plants showing strong pink coloration. Mr. Manda says it has proven to be an exceedingly easy grower and remarkably durable as a house plant.

by the particular crop. While at the present time these matters are largely matters of routine and thumb rule, yet experience has taught us that certain proportions of leaf-mold, of sand and of loam are best for carnations, while a slightly different proportion is best for roses, and so on through the list. Some plants require soils which are loose and peaty in character, while others require those which are compact and somewhat clayey. These variations have never been taken up and studied systematically by chemists or physicists. In fact, it is my belief that here is a very important field for investigation. The only work which has been done along this line, which I can bring to your attention, was that carried out by Galloway, in the study of lettuce soils, in which a careful physical examination was made of the different types upon which lettuce was most productive.

Cemetery of the Ages.

Since soil is the loose conglomeration of broken-down and disintegrated rock, of decayed plant and animal matter, some one has aptly paraphrased it as being "the cemetery of the ages and the resurrection of life." Surely, when we look upon a house of carnations or roses and observe the delicious perfume, exquisite color and the perfect shape of the flower buds, we believe the poet was correct when he made the statement just quoted, that the soil is the resurrection of life.

As has been noted, natural soils do not answer the purpose of the florist and the greenhouse man. We cannot afford to take nature's product, because in few instances are we able to secure an ideal combination, strange as it may seem, for the particular crop with which we are dealing. Nature builds not for special purposes, but for general purposes. Therefore, when we specialize in the cultivation of a particular crop and place it under extreme conditions, where great profit must be derived, it requires other factors than those found in nature; hence the necessity for the florist studying the composition of soils adapted to different crops.

Mechanical Condition of Soil.

In general agricultural parlance, as well as in floricultural literature, frequent allusion is made to soil fertility, to plant food, to fertilizers and methods of fertilization; but food supply is only one factor in which we are interested in the making of soils for greenhouse use. In field practice, as well as under glass, too little attention is given to ideal mechanical conditions of the soil. The mechanical condition of the soil determines, first, the water-holding capacity of the soil. The water-holding capacity of the soil, which is dependent upon the mechanical condition, determines the availability of the plant food which the soil contains, provided, of course, that the plant food is there in sufficient quantity. It will be seen, then, that the question of the use and the availability of plant food is dependent upon the mechanical condition primarily, rather than upon any other single factor.

Other important considerations in connection with our greenhouse soils are freedom from weeds, freedom from detrimental insects and freedom from germs of disease. By special methods in the handling and preparation of greenhouse soils, these requirements and difficulties

SOIL AND THE FLORIST

A Little Understood Subject.

The subject which has been assigned for our consideration this evening is the commonplace, low, downtrodden subject of the soil; so commonplace, indeed, that no one stops to think of its origin, its mission, or the work that is going on constantly within it. Like many other commonplace, omnipresent subjects, the soil elicits from us no thought, no consideration and no attention, except that which we are compelled to bestow upon it in order that we may wrest from it a livelihood. If we stop for a moment and consider the origin of the soil we find that it is the refined portion of the earth's crust, the earth's crust being made up of rock, of earth and of soil, and the most important of these is the soil, because it is the soil alone which furnishes a congenial habitat for plants, upon which all the higher animals, including man, must depend for sustenance. The soil, therefore, is the most important factor with which agriculture has to deal, and is, at the same time, the one factor most often overlooked and the one about which we know least. While chemists have attempted to analyze it, physicists to separate it, and philosophers to philosophize about it, we know comparatively little of its intricate relations to the plants living upon it. If we were to stop and trace the relations which the various forces in nature bear to the formation of the soil we might spend all the time allotted to us on this phase of the subject alone. If we were to consider the action of frost, of heat, of moisture, and of plant and animal life which inhabit the soil, upon its formation, its character and its fertility, we should have a subject requiring many sessions to discuss.

Natural Soils Unsuitable.

In general farming operations the character of the soil must, in a great measure, be taken as it is found in nature. The farmer must make the best use of it that is possible under the environment in which he finds himself. With the florist, however, conditions are very different. The florist is working under an artificial climate, and usually with an artificial soil. It is more economical in general for florists to combine the primary elements entering into the composition of soil for the purpose of producing the required composition for the special crop in hand, rather than to attempt to import from localities possessing such soil the amount required for his use. In other words, the florist is interested in the manufacture of as nearly as possible an ideal soil for the particular crop with which he is dealing. He attempts, through the construction of frames, hotbeds and greenhouses, to produce artificial conditions which shall be congenial, and as nearly ideal as his knowledge will permit, for the house and the rearing of the plants with which he is dealing. So also with the soil. It is his intention, in placing soil in the greenhouse for a particular crop, to make such combination of loam, sand, peat and humus as will give ideal physical conditions for the roots of the particular crop, and will at the same time produce an immediately available supply of plant food of the character demanded can be largely attained or overcome, as the case may be. The mechanical consistency of the soil can be produced by a proper combination of sand, of compost, leaf-mold, peat, loam and manure, depending upon the ideal to be attained. The available plant food can be supplied through the use of thoroughly decomposed manure, of nitrates, potash salts and the phosphates.

In general, however, it should be the aim to combine the ingredients entering into a compost several months in advance of the time when it is to be used in the greenhouse, in order that nature may have opportunity to prepare the materials contained in it for use by the plant. Comparatively few of the so-called fertilizers which are upon the market can be added to the soil and give immediate assistance to the plant. The soil must have an opportunity to, as it were, digest and assimilate these materials before they become of the greatest importance to the plant, and in this work the soil is assisted by the bacteria which it contains.

Beneficial Work of Bacteria.

No one should become agitated from the use of the word "bacteria," for we shall have much to say of it farther on. In other words, the materials which are to be combined in the greenhouse soil should be thoroughly composted before they are used in the benches or in the pots. The importance of this is made clear by the fact that every milligram of soil contains between 30,000 and 1,500,000 minute organisms which derive the means of their existence from the materials in the soil. The personnel of this great population is constantly changing. Every minute sees a new generation brought into existence and an old one pass away; hence the remark, "The soil is the cemetery of the ages." Millions upon millions of generations of minute organisms are constantly passing in this great world beneath our feet. In natural soils these teeming myriads are found chiefly within the first four feet of the earth's crust, and the top soil, which we cultivate and which is not more than a foot in depth, contains by far the greatest portion of this soil population. This fact is of interest to us because the soil bacteria are of all types and classes, those which are beneficial and those which are injurious to crops, to man and to animals, and it is fortunate that this population is confined to the surface soil and that the water-bearing strata of the earth are comparatively free from them. In other words, the water of the soil, drawn from a stratum ten or more feet below the surface, is comparatively free from contamination by soil bacteria or surface bacteria, provided there is no surface drainage to it; hence the value of the deeper soil providing an uncongenial place for these organisms.

The fact that so great a number of these organisms exist in the upper layer of the soil is due to the presence of decaying organic matter. Sandy soils contain fewer bacteria than clay soils, and the soils in which there is much decaying matter contain the greatest number. These organisms which are of importance to agriculture, known as soil bacteria, are able to transform the inert plant food in the rock particles, in the decaying vegetation and in the decaying animal forms into such shape as makes it available for the next generation of plants. These little organisms are the intermediaries between the past and the future generations that live upon the soil. In soils to which new supplies of organic matter are not frequently added these organisms, after years of continuous action, deplete the quantity of humus contained, so that it has been found that the rich prairie soils when taken up for agricultural purposes may contain as high as twenty per cent of humus, and supply was reduced to two or two and one-half per cent.

Action of Lime and Gypsum.

An important function which these organisms play in cultivated soil is to bring the organic forms of nitrogen into forms available for plant use, which is that of nitrates. Without going into the discussion of the methods by which this is accomplished, it is sufficient to say that these organisms thrive best in soils where there is an abundant supply of moist organic matter which does not become highly acid. The benefits from the use of lime, gypsum and other materials which correct acidity may largely be attributed to the benefit which they work upon these minute organisms in the soil. The alkaline condition brought about by the application of lime and gypsum gives a more congenial home for the bacteria than do the acid conditions which are brought about by fermentation and decomposition. These bacteria work only upon the products of decomposition and fermentation, and transform them into those forms of nitrogen which are available to plants. All of these steps are essential, but if one is excessive, the other suffers in consequence. This operation of transforming the products of decomposition and combustion is called nitrification.

If our compost heaps are made somewhat in advance of the period at which the soil is to be used in the greenhouse, opportunity will be given for this digestive operation, which is carried on by the soil bacteria, to take place. Nitrification will take place, but in order that nitrification may go on it is essential that the compost heap be made not too deep, and that it be kept moist rather than dry. Excessive heat is detrimental to the existence of bacteria, and causes a cessation of nitrification. Excessive cold operates in the same way. The height of the work is accomplished under July and August heat conditions, with the normal moisture. Excessive moisture is quite as detrimental as lack of moisture, so that attention should be given to the condition of the soil while it is in the compost heap in order to make an ideal greenhouse soil.

Determining Soil Requirements.

This brief sketch will serve to illustrate the important bearing which these unseen and to most of us unknown organisms have upon the important work of our lives, that of making a livelihood. And, strange as it may seem, it is only within comparatively few years that science has known anything at all of the importance or the relation of these organisms to soil fertility and plant life. Years ago it was thought that the chemist could supply us information concerning the composition of our soils and the requirements of the plant. True it is, he can analyze plant products and tell us of what they are composed; he can analyze the soils and tell us what they contain; but his analysis is so far-reaching that it does not tell us the relation which the constituents of the soil bear to the living organism, the plant. The fertility of the soil cannot be determined by chemical analysis. The plant is the only means of telling us what the soil contains, so far as plant requirements are concerned. Mechanical analysis can tell us the fineness of the soil, the proportion of sand and of clay and of organic matter, but it can go no further. For the ultimate analysis in which we are most interested we must constantly return to the plant, and, by noting its behavior, its growth and its color, determine from experience what the soil lacks in order that we may secure the growth desired.

FOUR GOOD SWEET PEAS.

The pink Countess Spencer, Nora Unwin, Queen Alexandra and Mrs. Geo. Higginson, Jr., form a fine set of sweet peas for florists' use for outdoor planting, and the grower who uses them this summer will find them great improvements over corresponding colors of older varieties.

Nora Unwin is a grand white, ahead of any other, even that leader of the last two seasons, Dorothy Eckford. In Countess Spencer we have a most pleasing shade of pink, almost shell pink. The flowers are of the largest size, usually four on a long, stiff stem. This variety is without a doubt one of the finest sweet peas Mr. Eckford has yet introduced. Queen Alexandra fills the bill where a scarlet red is wanted, and while the average florist has not much call for red sweet peas, those who have use for them will find this one the best of its class. For a light lavender flower Mrs. Geo. Higginson, Jr., is a good one, even if the name is not appropriate and is far too long. There is a long list of other beautiful shades, many of which adapt themselves especially to florists' use, but for the small grower four good varieties, as mentioned above, are almost sufficient to form his main crop. Though it is well to try a few of the novelties, as there are always improvements to be found among them over existing varieties, there is more call for pink, white and lavender than all of the other colors or shades combined.

While writing on sweet peas it might be well to call attention to the fact that many growers make a great mistake in sowing sweet peas too thick. If you have good seed, do not sow closer than an inch and a half, and two inches between the seeds for early sowing is even better. If the plants have a chance to grow during the last part of April, or during May, they will, if not crowded, produce quite a number of branches, all of which will bloom, and they will bloom longer and better. By sowing thickly the plants are forced to grow straight up without having a chance to branch from below; the plants will have a few good blooms and then give out; short-stemmed flowers and the falling or drying up of the lower leaves of the plants will be the result. It has been repeatedly proven that thinly sown sweet peas outlast thickly sown ones, and yet too often this is overlooked and the cheapness of the seeds tempts the planter to "put enough in the drill," which for early sowing is wrong. When, however, seed is sown late, it is well to sow thick, for the plants will not make a luxurious growth in midsummer. F. B.

Care of Young Stock.

Care is by no means over when the cuttings are rooted and established in soil. The disposition to reason that since these young plants are not productive, any sort of bench or conditions will suffice, must be banished from the mind at once. Still, there is such a thing as injuring them with kindness—in other words, pampering or coddling.

We like the plan of potting each cutting, for by this means one is able to give each plant that individual attention not possible when planted directly into bench or flats. Shifting from pots to flats admits of the stock being moved at any time, and in many cases it is very convenient to be able to do this, but perhaps the feature which will appeal most to the commercial grower is the saving in soil.

As soon as young stock has taken hold after the shift from pots, instead of maintaining a temperature suited to blooming stock, gradually reduce to 45 or 50 degrees during the day, with a drop of 10 degrees at night. This treatment will encourage slow, sturdy growth and may be said to effect a partial rest, a luxury which, under the strain of present times, the divine flower knows little of, but would none the less appreciate. It may be thought the plants will be undersized at planting out time, but such will not be the case, for the sun's rays are increasing in strength and outside conditions will soon be such that there will be no rest for plants or persons—the one will grow apace and the other must hustle to keep up.

An Inexcusable Evil.

If there is one thing above another that will cause trouble it is for a batch of young plants to become infested with greenfly or red spider. The punctures made by these vermin open the way for a multitude of ills, without reckoning the direct damage done by the insects themselves, and the worst feature in the case is the total absence of any excuse in the power of man to invent that will justify the existence of such condition. Too high temperature and insufficient ventilation conspire to bring about these insidious pests. GEO. S. OSBORN.

TROUBLE WITH ENCHANTRESS.

Will you kindly inform us as to what ingredient or ingredients are needed in soils to tend to give good color to blooms, and tell us what fertilizer will obtain the result? Part of our Enchantress are growing on a raised bench and part on a solid bed. On the raised bench the color of the blooms is all that is to be desired, but in the solid bed for the last two months it has not been satisfactory. In both instances we have a rather heavy clay loam enriched with one-fourth well decomposed horse manure and a fair amount of bone meal, to the surface of which we added between 150 and 200 pounds of wood ashes to 600 square feet of bench after the plants were established. We have had, as usual, a great amount of cloudy weather since December. The plants have a good, healthy look, with strong stems, but the blooms are not as deep a color on all plants, and especially on the splits. The stock we planted from the field the latter part of August, 9x12 inches, and many were extra large. The bed does not dry out quickly, only requiring water about once in ten days in cloudy weather.

The temperature at night has gone as low as 45 degrees, but the average has been 50 to 54 degrees. Day temperature has been from 54 to 60 degrees, and 70 degrees on bright days, with plenty of air. At present we have a tremendous crop of buds and the plants themselves look fine. Do you think the secret of the trouble we wish to avoid lies in our plants being too close together and the bed not drying out readily, or is it the solid bed or some other cause? Last year our plants were not nearly so large, but were planted the same distance apart and color was good nearly the whole season.

A. E. R.

I hardly think you have touched on the cause of your trouble. I am sure it is not the solid bed, if this bed is constructed in such a manner that the drainage is efficient. We grow Enchantress on our solid beds (that is, four inches of soil underlaid with a foot of cinders) and as for color they could hardly be improved upon. You will find in nearly every case these delicate colors are heightened when the soil is run slightly on the wet side, while allowing the soil to dry out frequently causes the color to pale. You can notice this especially on white varieties, which often are slightly mottled with pink, like Lady Bountiful. So unless you have been running your bed excessively wet I cannot see how the solid bed caused the trouble. It may possibly be in the soil, but if your soil is on the clay order it ought to make the color deeper than if the soil were lighter.

You will find that everywhere the color of Enchantress is more or less variable, and unless you select your cuttings carefully each season you will have these off-colored blooms mixed with your stock. I have noticed, whenever I have seen such cases, the off-colored blooms were mostly on plants which showed less vigor than the balance, and it may be attributed to some extent to that. The same may be said of the splits. Unless you push your plants too hard by feeding, etc., you will find the splits mostly on plants which are deteriorating somewhat.

One of the best things to put color into both foliage and flower is soft coal soot. You can apply it either in liquid or dry form. To use it as a liquid, put a bag with a half-bushel of soot in a barrel of water. It will take some time before it will mix with the water, but when it does mix you will have a good tonic for your plants. A good plan for using it in dry form is to sprinkle the soil well with it and then cover it with a half inch of fine manure. That will prevent it from being blown around when watering with the hose.

You planted too close, and that would not help matters any. Enchantress should never be planted closer than 10x12, and 12x12 is better.

You do not say what date you applied the wood ashes, but as a general thing we would consider 200 pounds of wood ashes too much for 600 square feet of bench space. Half that quantity would be plenty for one application. You will usually find that when your plants are of medium size and they carry a fair average number of blooming shoots, or if they have been handled so that they will not bloom in crops, there will be less cull and off-colored blooms than there will be if you grow extra large plants and bloom them in crops.

NEW CARNATIONS IN ENGLAND.

An English grower of American carnations makes the following comment on the behavior of our newer sorts on that side of the Atlantic:

"Aristocrat is described as bright cerise, a shade brighter than Mrs. Lawson. In its form, stem, habit and size one grower says it is nearer perfection than any carnation of today. If this is so, it must differ with him from what it has done with me. It is possible that when we have propagated our own stock and grown it another season it may have the good qualities attributed to it. Under artificial light it is most effective. Winsor is a variety which promises well. It is silvery-pink, and the color improves after the blooms are fully open. It has a good full flower, calyx and stem good, and apparently it is a good grower. The color is a useful shade for winter; this variety and Beacon are the most promising of those we have on trial this season.

"Melody is a pale pink sport from Mrs. Lawson, and has the same shaped bloom as the parent, and similar habit; this may improve another season, but so far it is a trifle disappointing.

"Helen Gould, a sport from Enchantress, with fine pencilings of carmine on silvery pink, has been simply Enchantress in bloom and growth with me, but I saw some good blooms of this variety at Chelsea recently, fully bearing out the catalogue description; like most sports, this will probably vary at times, and therefore must not be judged too quickly.

"Pink Imperial is said to be a pink sport from Imperial, but its color I should describe as rosy-magenta, and not at all pleasing. I may be color blind, but it requires a great stretch of imagination on my part to describe this variety as pink; indeed, it is misleading to send out varieties of this shade and call them pink.

"The unsatisfactory varieties of this season may improve after becoming acclimatized, but in my opinion this batch is not much improvement on previous introductions. Have our American friends reached perfection in their tree carnations?

"I think that with the material now at the command of English growers they may raise varieties more suitable for our winter cultivation under glass than some of the American varieties have proved to be."

PRIMULA KEWENSIS.

The beautiful acquisition to greenhouse primroses, Primula Kewensis, originated at the Royal Gardens, Kew, England, and is supposed to be an accidental cross between the tiny, bright flowered P. floribunda, of the Himalayas, and the fragrant P. verticillata, a native of Arabia. The plant is of vigorous habit, with bright green leaves, and carries numerous erect flower scapes, which attain a height of twelve to twenty-four inches. These carry from four to six whorls of flowers, which are arranged at intervals the whole length of the scapes. The flowers, which are bright golden yellow in color and scented like those of the English cowslip, P. veris, have a slender tube and spreading limb and are about an inch in diameter.

This primula blooms with remarkable freedom in a very small state. It is useful for house decoration, the plants for this purpose lasting fully as well as those of P. obconica. It is also well adapted for cutting and the flowers are well adapted for table decoration. The plants last several months in flower and, as decorative plants, must be classed as among the greatest acquisitions of late years. When exhibited in London it was honored with a first-class certificate. It is popular in Europe and those who are growing it in America are favorably impressed with it. As a commercial plant it should find a ready sale. While it is in flower at Christmas, it is in better condition during January and February. The illustration is of a plant in a 6-inch pot, photographed January 1. W. N. C.

AN English firm now has an excellent strain of cyclamen in which the flowers are a bright reddish salmon, with deeper shading at the base.

SEASONABLE

SUGGESTIONS

Hydrangeas.

Hydrangea plants wanted for Easter sales must now have the flower heads two to three inches in diameter if they are to be in flower when wanted. Of course, if given a warm April, even more backward stock may be forced into bloom, but strong heat for hydrangeas produces leggy and soft plants, not at all the kind which is likely to take the eyes of your customers. We do not like a temperature exceeding 55 degrees at night at any stage of growth, but we sometimes see them sweltering in a house kept 10 degrees higher. Hydrangeas call for abundant supplies of water at all stages of their growth, and a good drying out may mean the ruin of the flower heads. Liquid manure twice a week will benefit them, and if there are any signs of pale foliage, a result of semi-starvation at the roots, use a little sulphate of ammonia or nitrate of soda in the water. As the flower heads gain size and weight, use some stakes for them before they can become twisted. If, as suggested some weeks ago, you put in a good batch of cuttings after starting your Easter plants, they should now be nicely rooted. Do not allow them to stay in the propagating bench any longer than is necessary. These little plants, if set out in nursery rows after danger of frost has gone, and kept well cultivated, will make splendid stock for forcing another season.

Memorial day is an occasion when there is a heavy call for these plants, and if your stock has not yet been started, get them cleaned over a little and started in a cool house without delay. The interval between Easter and Memorial day this year is less than six weeks, and quite a little forethought and scheming will be necessary to provide space for all the plants wanted on the two occasions.

Pansies and Daisies.

Pansies and daisies always meet with a ready sale in spring. Your plants are probably either in coldframes or in the open ground. As winter in the more northerly states hates to bid us adieu before April, we can do nothing with the outdoor stock for some time yet, but where the plants are in coldframes they should now have their winter covering removed and any frost we get after the middle of March will hardly injure them through the sashes. Air them freely and with the increasing power of the sun's rays they will soon grow freely. If you want some earlier flowers, lift a quantity and plant in the bench in a violet house temperature. Do not on any account try forcing, or you will speedily ruin them. It is not wise to remove the covering on your outside plants with the first signs of spring. Often we get frosts and cold winds during the last half of March, which work havoc with exposed plants.

Sweet Peas.

As soon as you can work the soil is the time to prepare a piece of ground for your first sowing of sweet peas. Do not make the mistake of waiting until May 1 before doing this, reasoning that the ground must be warm for them or they will not start well. There can be no greater fallacy than this. By getting your sweet peas in while the land is cool and moist, the seed will make strong roots before the tops appear and will give you much finer flowers than can be secured from the later sown ones. If you had time to prepare your land late in the fall, all the better, but if not, manure liberally. Use some wood ashes if your ground lacks potash, and plow or spade it deeply. Sow the seed thinly, or have courage to thin the seedlings if you feel you must put thrice as many in the drills as are needed.

Of course the soil should be dry when seeding is done, but there is no occasion to worry if a foot of snow and stiff freezing weather follow the operation. Such climatic changes will not harm the seeds in the least. Mixed colors of sweet peas do not usually sell well. A few desirable sorts for commercial use are: White, Dorothy Eckford, White Wonder; scarlet, Queen Alexandra, King Edward VII; rosy carmine, John Ingman; orange pink, Helen Lewis, Miss Willmott; blue and white, Phenomenal or Helen Pierce; pink or rose, Countess Spencer, Gladys Unwin; lavender, Mrs. Geo. Higginson, Lady Grisel Hamilton; blue, Navy Blue; striped, America.

Don't Forget:—

That bench of slow-moving stock can be promptly turned into Cash (it comes with the order), if offered in the Classified Department of the REVIEW. It costs only 10 cents a line.

The early batch of indoor sweet peas which have flowered practically all winter are now running out, and as they easily become the prey of red spider when pushing against the glass, it is best to throw them out and give attention to the later sowings, which are just coming into flower. As the plants grow very fast now, a good deal of care is needed to give them the supports necessary. When other duties crowd as they do at this busy season, it is easy to overlook these little details, but it does not pay to do so, for if the peas once become bent and twisted they never seem to fully recover from it.

Cyclamens.

Easter this year comes too late for cyclamens. While they never cut much of a figure at that festival, we have always thought that nicely flowered plants, especially of the pure white forms, should sell well, but there are so many other plants then in season that growers have always seemed to prefer catering to the Christmas and earlier winter trade rather than hold their plants back for Easter. Any remaining unsold will now require some shading, or the flowers will soon be ruined. Cyclamens enjoy a fair amount of sunshine and plenty of pure air at all times of their growth, barring the seedling stage, but the late February and early March sun is too much for flowering plants.

Your little seedlings raised last October should not be overlooked in the coming spring rush. Keep them well up to the light and the surface soil stirred, weeds removed and the plants spread out so that their leaves do not quite touch. If you are fumigating once a week, there will be no likelihood of thrips getting a foothold. If they do, spray with tobacco juice and fumigate lightly on three successive evenings. Do not allow the little plants to become potbound. Avoid large shifts when repotting. Remember that these plants do not make roots as speedily as hydrangeas, geraniums or rambler roses. A 1-inch shift is sufficient when in pots below four inches. From the latter size they can go to 5½-inch, which is better than 6-inch.

Allamandas.

Allamandas are not so much grown by florists as their value warrants. Where there is a call for choice summer flowers, they are very useful. The dwarf variety, A. Williamsi, makes a splendid pot plant, while A. Schottii, A. Hendersoni and A. grandiflora are all excellent climbers. In Europe they are used to a considerable extent for exhibition purposes, trained on balloon-shaped frames, but we have never seen them grown in this way in America, except on one or two occasions. If the plants have been kept fairly dry during the winter, any necessary pruning can now be done. Climbers should have the surface soil picked away and a liberal top-dressing applied. Plants in pots of moderate size can have a large part of the old soil shaken away and be started in smaller pots. A compost of fibrous loam, lumpy cow manure well dried, sharp sand and fine charcoal suits them. Pot firmly, water well and then keep rather dry until root growth is active and the plants break freely. Spray several times a day lightly and keep in a warm house. After June allamandas will thrive finely in any ordinary greenhouse. We have found the flowers valuable for table decorations at times when choice material was rather scarce. Propagation is easy from soft cuttings. Half ripened wood will also root, but takes more time.

Brief Reminders.

Prick off seedlings of gloxinias and begonias as soon as large enough to handle. Use shallow flats of light compost.

Keep the propagating bench well filled. Do not allow rooted cuttings to remain until they become hard, or they will be of little value.

Retard all Dutch bulbs intended for Easter. A coldframe will bring them along in season, if greenhouse bench space is scarce.

Spread out the spiræas as they grow and feed with liquid manure freely. Use care when fumigating, as these plants are very easily scorched.

Easter lilies which are a little forward should be placed in a somewhat cooler house. If buds are now visible, your plants are all right for Easter; otherwise forcing will be necessary.

It is rather early yet to start dahlias. Look over the roots of these and of gladioli and remove any showing signs of decay.

If you have a call for vegetable plants in spring, you can now sow tomatoes, lettuce, celery, cabbage, cauliflower, peppers and eggplants.

Palms and ferns will now require a little shade. Apply only a light coating as yet. Your pink carnations will hold their color better with a thin streaking over the glass. Violets you may wish to retard should have a moderately heavy shade. This keeps the house cooler and the flowers come of a deeper blue shade.

Get in a batch of marguerite cuttings. Carry these plants through the summer in pots and they will flower at Christmas for you.

Pot off the little smilax and asparagus seedlings before they become crowded.

Remove coverings from your seeds as they germinate, to prevent the plants from becoming spindly. Keep all well up to the light, to make them stocky.

JAMES J. KARINS.

There are not many florists who will fail to recognize the subject of the accompanying illustration, which is from a photograph made at Portland, Ore. Mr. Karins has the geniality which marks the successful traveler, but he is, nevertheless, earnest in all his efforts. J. D. Eisele, vice-president of Henry A. Dreer, Inc., and manager of the Riverton nurseries, writes:

"Mr. Karins was born at Riverton, N. J., in 1873 and entered our nursery at the age of 14 as an apprentice. He served in all departments, became familiar with the growing end, and, for many years, was connected with the order department, where the bulk of the wholesale or trade orders came under his direct charge and which duty fitted him exceptionally well for his present occupation of traveler, he being thoroughly posted, not only with the values of the stock he sells but also becoming thoroughly familiar with the requirements of the trade in the various sections of the country which he covers and which extend from the Atlantic to the Pacific, as well as Canada. In other words, he is a Dreer man with Dreer methods and at the same time he is fully alive to and in sympathy with the requirements of the trade he visits. He holds the full confidence of both his company and his customers, all of which is shown in his successful career as a salesman during the past three years."

James J. Karins.

CAMERON'S ADVICE.

Robert Cameron, of the Harvard Botanic Garden, Cambridge, Mass., recently has lectured before some of the horticultural societies in New England on "Annuals and Biennials." At one place he said:

"In my opinion, it is always wisest to buy the best strains of seed obtainable, even if they cost more. There is less work and care with good, fresh seed than there is with cheap, unreliable kinds. The cheap seed needs as much care and attention as good seed does, and never gives as good results. No doubt you have all noticed in spring, when the weather begins to get warm and when man begins to think he ought to get back to the soil, how quickly seed stores multiply; they grow up like mushrooms. At that time you will see displayed in the windows of druggists, grocers, bakers and such places, boxes of annuals with pictures of flowers of the most brilliant colors imaginable. If anyone wants to get results, my advice would be to shun these places and buy seeds from reputable seedsmen who have made a life study of the seed business. They can't afford to sell you unreliable seeds.

"Many of the annual seeds lose their germinating power much earlier than other seeds; therefore it is very important that they have been freshly collected the previous year. The cheaper the strain the more plants you will get. From the finer and more expensive strains fewer plants are obtained, but one gets quality against quantity.

"There are no plants easier to grow than annuals, but the easiness of culture has got many people into the habit of growing them in a haphazard way and often they do not get the attention they deserve. To get good results we have to give them just as good care as we give to other garden plants. Then the luxuriance of growth and the plentiful supply of flowers pay us amply for the extra care.

"It is a great mistake to think they will grow in any kind of soil. The majority enjoy a good, rich, loose, open soil, and most of them are great lovers of sunlight; therefore they should be given position where they can get plenty of light."

ROSES

GARDEN ROSES.

Hybrid Teas Deserve Preference.

At the Washington meeting of the American Rose Society, Theodore Wirth, superintendent of parks at Minneapolis, made it clear that he is an enthusiast on outdoor roses. He said the hybrid tea rose will win for itself recognition and preference as an outdoor rose, the more its hardiness becomes known. It is in reality this class which is entitled to the name "perpetual bloomers" in the proper sense of the word. I think that hybrid remontant is the proper name for what we call now hybrid perpetual; for the word remontant really means what they do—bloom a second time (once more), but not continually during the season, as do the hybrid teas, teas and polyanthas.

Let us see what we have today among the old standbys and newcomers well adapted for outdoor culture. I do not claim for all those I mention the title, the best, for therein we differ according to taste, experience and observation. I simply mention them as varieties with which I have been successful and which seem to me to merit a place in every rose garden where climatic conditions are congenial to their growth. Every color and shade is represented.

Remontants and Hybrid Teas.

In white and shades we have the following hybrid remontants: Frau Karl Druschki, Mabel Morrison, Marchioness of Londonderry, Margaret Dickson, Mavourneen, Perfection des Blancs, Coquette des Blancs and Coquette des Alpes. Hybrid teas: Augustine Guinoiseau, Helene Guillot, Kaiserin Augusta Victoria, Mildred Grant, Marquise Jeanne de la Chataigneraye, Souvenir de Mme. Eugenie Verdier, Maman Cochet.

In red and its many shades we have the following hybrid remontants: Etienne Levet, General Jacqueminot, Gloire de Margottin, Horace Vernet, Jules Margottin, Jubilee, Marie Baumann, Oscar Cordel, Mme. Prosper Laugier, Reynolds Hole, Robert Duncan, Sultan of Zanzibar. Hybrid teas: Baldwin, Dean Hole, Etoile de France, Mme. Ferdinand Jamain, Gruss an Teplitz, Liberty, Rev. David R. Williamson, Richmond, Papa Gontier.

In rose or pink we find the following hybrid remontants: American Beauty, Anna de Diesbach, Baroness Rothschild, Baronne Prevost, Clio, Caroline de Sansal, Comtesse Cecile Chabillant, Countess of Rosebery, Duchesse de Vallombrosa, Dupuy Jamain, Eugenie Verdier, Heinrich Schultheis, Helen Keller, La Reine, Mme. Gabriel Luizet, Magna Charta, Marchioness of Downshire, Marchioness of Dufferin, Marguerite de St. Amande, Marquise de Castellane, Mrs. John Laing, Mrs. R. G. Sharman Crawford, Oakmont, Paul Neyron, Pride of Waltham, Rev. J. B. M. Camm, Suzanne Marie Rodocanachi, Victor Verdier. Hybrid teas: Captain Christy, Caroline Testout, Dr. J. Campbell Hall, Killarney, La France, Mme. Abel Chatenay, Maman Cochet, Mrs. W. J. Grant, Reine Marie Henriette, Miss Kate Moulton.

JAMES J. H. GREGORY, of Marblehead, Mass., has attained to his eightieth year and practically the whole of his long business life has been spent in the seed trade.

AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY.

Special Prizes.

The large list of specials betokens a most creditable interest in the coming rose show. August F. Poehlmann, Morton Grove, Ill., is manager. George Asmus, 879 West Madison street, Chicago, Ill., is assistant manager, and will be in charge of exhibits.

Send an application for entry to T. E. Waters, secretary of the Chicago Florists' Club, or file with Benjamin Hammond, secretary of the American Rose Society.

It is urgently desired that all intending exhibitors will let the committee know early what they will send. Last year, at Washington, exhibitors delayed doing this until the last day in the afternoon, and the result was that the extent of the exhibits was really not known until they were on the ground, and this rush made it hard work to handle. It is now safe to say that the finest and newest of roses will be seen in the Art Institute from March 25 to 27 and that the general display will be elegant.

BENJAMIN HAMMOND, Sec'y.
Fishkill-on-Hudson, N. Y.

The following list of special prizes, constituting Class F, is complete as far as reported to March 5:

POPULARITY OF THE IRIS.

The illustration on page 12 is from a photograph made at Hicksville, L. I., and shows the field of irises of Rowehl & Granz. They make a specialty of irises, dahlias, peonies, gladioli and canas, and say that there is a marked advance in the popularity of each one of these flowers as compared with only a few years ago, but that of all the iris has enjoyed the most rapid gain in popular favor. They say that where a few years ago it was difficult to interest planters in the purchase of irises, now there is a wide demand for them and they look forward to a much greater increase in their sales as soon as the beauty of the improved sorts is known to those who now are familiar with only the old-fashioned varieties.

F. H. Kramer.

(President-elect Washington Florists' Club.)

A VIOLET TREE.

At the present time, when most garden artists are trying hard to imitate the Japanese art and fashion of reducing big plants to dwarf growths, one gardener has tried and succeeded in the reverse and brought out a tree grown from a little flower which heretofore never reached more than about six inches above the ground. It seems that a second Luther Burbank has arisen in a Saxon gardener, who found his untiring energy rewarded after many years of trial and labor in creating the masterpiece of garden art, a violet tree, Viola odorata arborea.

The following are a few details which might interest readers of the REVIEW. The grower states that these unique creations have been grown from the ordinary plain violet flower, which under his hands has been improved and converted into charming little trees, reaching a height of from three to five feet. These little trees get into bloom every year from the beginning of March till the end of April. The crowns are then thickly covered with big, dark blue flowers on 4-inch to 6-inch stems, giving off an exceedingly fine odor.

To bring such a tree to maturity requires a period of from fourteen to seventeen years. These trees require only the simplest treatment, not only during summer in the open, but also in the winter in the greenhouse, or in low temperature in living rooms.

For select presents they are well suited. Naturally the price is high, on account of the difficulty in growing them and the length of time required. At present only crowned heads, such as the emperors of Germany and Austria and several kings, have received them. Now the pope in Rome has expressed a wish to possess a specimen. The price ranges from $150 to $250 apiece, according to size and perfection. How the matter is done is, of course, a secret of the inventor. E. RUDOWSKY.

EVERY florist should join the anti-billboard movement. People who plant glaring advertising signs don't plant flowers; they directly affect our trade in several adverse ways.

It has been said that any fairly good soil will do for pricking young vegetable seedlings into; but the plants will make root more quickly when the soil is good than they will in indifferent soil. About one-fourth well rotted stable manure added to ordinary soil, in the filling of boxes into which vegetable seedlings are to be transplanted, will work wonders in root formation.

THE WEEKLY
FLORISTS'
REVIEW

is printed Wednesday evening and mailed early Thursday morning. It is earnestly requested that all advertisers and correspondents mail their "copy" to reach us by Monday, or Tuesday at latest, instead of Wednesday morning, as many have done in the past.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

INCORPORATED BY ACT OF CONGRESS MARCH 4, '01

Officers for 1908: President, F. H. Traendly, New York; vice-president, George W. McClure, Buffalo; secretary pro tem., Willis N. Rudd, Morgan Park, Ill.; treasurer, H. B. Beatty, Pittsburg.

Annual convention, Niagara Falls, August 18 to 21, 1908.

First National Flower Show, Chicago, November 9 to 15, 1908; W. F. Kasting, Buffalo, chairman.

THE green carnation will have its inning again next week.

GET in on the low prices of glass; you surely will need a few boxes for fall repairs.

EVERY florist who sells to the public should do some special advertising at Easter. Plan it now, and urge early buying.

TO ENCLOSE a written communication in a package of plants or other article mailed at anything lower than the letter rate of postage is to violate the postal laws and render the sender liable to a penalty of $10 for each offense.

THE Robert Craig Co., Philadelphia, is so well impressed with the new rose Tausendschon, that it is forcing about a thousand large plants for Easter. The Dingee & Conard Co. says that without doubt this is the best forcing climbing rose introduced since Crimson Rambler.

WHILE it usually is possible for the REVIEW to publish, in any Thursday's issue, advertisements received on Wednesday morning, it only is possible because most advertisers get their copy in Monday or Tuesday. Everyone who lets us have early instructions is helping to take care of the ones who have reason to be late.

THE proceedings of the Congress of Horticulture held at the Jamestown Exposition, September 23, 1907, have been issued in book form by H. C. Irish, secretary of the National Council of Horticulture. The volume is neatly printed and contains 108 pages, setting forth from a variety of points of view the development to which horticulture in America had attained at the date of the congress. The publication of the proceedings was made possible by contributions from a number of well known commercial interests, but it is not possible to supply the volume except upon the payment of the small fee of 25 cents. Address Secretary Irish, care of the Missouri Botanical Garden, St. Louis.

It is only six weeks to Easter—no time to lose.

ROSES of such varieties as Lady Gay, Dorothy Perkins, The Farquhar and Wedding Bells make glorious displays while in bloom. There are many objects, now covered with much less effective vines, which could be just as well hidden for the greater part of the year with the rose plants, and these at the same time would give such a wealth of brilliant flowers that it is a wonder they are not used more than they are for such purposes. Old fences and old walls are frequently covered with pink roses and Crimson Ramblers. Wooden buildings, trellised and likewise covered, are frequently seen in a few favored localities, and such easy means of transforming ugly objects into things of beauty will, no doubt, gradually suggest themselves to residents of numerous other localities.

THE DEATH ROLL.

Mrs. G. T. Sambrook.

Mrs. George T. Sambrook, of Troy, N. Y., died recently at the age of 70, from an attack of the grippe, and the funeral was held March 4. Among the floral offerings at the funeral was a beautiful wreath of roses and valley from the Albany Florists' Club. Mr. Sambrook, Sr., is very ill at the time of writing. The two sons, who succeeded to the business founded by the father, have the sympathy of the craft at this time. M.

THE PRESS SERVICE.

Beginning with March 7 the National Council of Horticulture sends out the first installment of four articles on gardening topics, beginning the season's newspaper campaign.

The council has conducted a similar service for the last two years. It is free to local daily and weekly newspapers and in most cases exclusive to each one in its city. The articles are prepared under the immediate direction of Prof. H. C. Irish, of the Missouri Botanical Garden, St. Louis, and their cost is defrayed by voluntary subscription by the S. A. F., Seed and Nursery associations and by firms and individuals. Their object is to arouse popular interest in horticulture, which will result in more beautiful home grounds, more beautiful cities, and a better understanding of nature.

Professor Irish, who is secretary of the council, which was organized at the world's fair in St. Louis, is advised in the conduct of the bureau by Prof. S. A. Beach, of the Iowa Agricultural College; Prof. L. R. Taft, Michigan Agricultural College; Prof. S. B. Green, of St. Anthony Park, Minn.; Prof. E. J. Wickson, Berkeley, Cal.; Prof. W. W. Tracy, of the Agricultural Department, Washington; J. Horace McFarland, of the American Civic Association, and J. H. Hale, of South Glastonbury, Conn.

These articles deal with the elementary things of gardening and are intended to reach beginners. Many of the leading newspapers of the country have published them in the last two years. They have no doubt done much for the trade interests. See that your local papers print them, and call your patrons' attention to the series, which contains some seventy articles and will run through June.

The Great Central Market.

The feature of the market is the marked increase in the supply of roses, of which the receipts are so much heavier than a week ago that there has been a decided weakening in prices, the wholesalers finding it difficult to clean up. A large crop of roses presents an even more difficult problem than a heavy cut of carnations, especially when the quality of the stock is of the superb order now marking nearly every grower's production. It may be all right to clean up first quality carnations in thousand lots at cheap prices, but one is slow to cut the price of 8-cent roses to the point where the cheap-sales merchants can handle them. Beauties are among the roses that show the increase in supply, and quality is much better than it was even a week ago. Prices have gone off 20 to 25 per cent. Both Bride and Maid are ahead of legitimate requirements, though the call for funeral work makes a better market for short white than for any other roses. It is easier to clean out the lower grades just now than it is the long stock. The prospect is for a still further increase in the cuts of roses, and any one who is able to handle them in quantity should prepare to do business.

There is a general reduction in the carnation cuts, but there still are more than the market needs for the legitimate demand, and bargain sales in large lots are still in order. Friday usually cleans up everything that can be offered at a price.

Bulbous stock continues in oversupply, although many wholesalers say the receipts at present are not as great as they were a year ago. Prices are, however, considerably lower than then, and the growers who depend on bulb stock for their profit are not pleased with the situation; nor are they buying bulbs as heavily for another year. Callas are in full crop and accumulating almost everywhere. Harrisii also are overabundant.

It is a pleasure to record that there is an improvement in the market for violets, although prices continue low. The singles are approaching the end of their season. The stock from Rhinebeck continues of good quality for the time of year.

Sweet peas have become more plentiful than heretofore, but the best continue to sell well, with no special demand for the low grades. The call for green has abated; no need to make funeral designs of galax and leucothoe when flowers are so cheap.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club held a real meeting March 5. It was the first of the series at the Union restaurant, 111 Randolph street, for the change in arrangements met the unanimous approval of the thirty-five members who turned out despite the heavy rain—a storm that would have prevented a quorum at the old place of meeting. It was on motion of August Poehlmann, with half a dozen simultaneous seconds, that it was voted to approve the action of the officers, change the meeting night to the first Thursday of each month, and make the Union headquarters.

President Kill's administration received a further boost by the election of six new members and the receipt of seven more applications. The new members are A. J. Schillo, Herman Schiller, John J. Kruechten, J. H. Pepper, H. C. Lenington and W. G. Henning, the latter of Blue Island. The applicants were A. Aggerholm, Onarga; Emil Pielke, Geneva; H. C. Blewitt, Des Plaines; R. Schiller, Charles Peterson, John Michelson and H. P. Prescott.

The committee on rose show, March 25 to 27, reported everything going well but the premium list not yet out, because there are so many valuable special premiums that it is a big task to frame up a schedule placing the money where it will do the most good. The rose show banquet committee announced that the "feed" will take place Thursday evening, March 26, the place to be announced later. A hundred guests are expected and there ought to be a local man to sit with each guest—not to watch the spoons, but to return in kind the hospitality with which Chicago's representatives have been entertained on recent pilgrimages.

At the conclusion of the business session refreshments were served and the business had been over an hour before anyone thought of leaving the room. The next meeting will be April 2 and a bite, a sup and a smoke will be provided, as is the intention for each meeting in the future.

Rose Show Arrangements.

The committee in charge of the rose show arrangements had luncheon at the Union March 9. Mr. Carpenter, of the Art Institute, was present, and arrangements for the show were practically completed. It was decided to issue trade tickets at 25 cents for members of the trade to visit the exhibition during the evenings, when the general admission will be 50 cents.

It was determined to have the banquet at the Union Thursday evening, March 26, the entire second floor of the building being placed at the service of the trade.

Fire at Philip's.

Fire March 10 destroyed the boiler-room and potting shed at the Jacob Philip place on Touhy avenue, the greenhouses escaping serious damage in spite of the long distance from fire protection. The plant, while owned by Mr. Philip, who is a relative of John Munro and a number of other north end growers, is leased to a Mrs. Turner and is in lettuce this season.

Various Notes.

It is considered that the best indication of the state of general business and collections is shown by the bank clearings. For the week ending March 7 these were 3 per cent greater than in the corresponding week of last year. It was the first time they had exceeded last year's record since the middle of October.

The A. L. Randall Co. says that the sale for chiffons has increased greatly since last year, indicating that the retailers are using them more freely than they are using ribbons.

George Reinberg is busily engaged in replanting Beauties for his summer crop.

Frederick Sperry says any one can afford a new spring suit when they get it the way he got his, on three payments in a suit club; total cost, $1.50.

The Bentley-Coatsworth Co. reports a big crop of Brides at the Coatsworth greenhouses, at New Castle. Maid and Killarney are not in so heavy.

Mrs. Beu says that the green carnation fluid is not selling as well as heretofore; too many now in it. The powder goes better than the fluid, because it saves express.

Wieter Bros. say that while a stronger market would be decidedly welcome, the rose and carnation growers have no special cause for complaint, for there is a profit in the present volume of business, even if not so good as last year.

Joseph Foerster says that the money returned to growers has steadily increased in the last three weeks, although the average prices have not improved. He says low averages never are satisfactory, but that the fact speaks for a fair volume of business throughout this market.

There is already considerable inquiry for white carnations for St. Patrick's day, and 4 cents is quoted for good stock in white for shipment for that occasion.

E. C. Amling says his records show that in the first week of March last year there were some decidedly dull days, and he thinks conditions would compare very favorably with those of a year ago were it not for the larger supply of stock.

C. W. McKellar reports that he has made a number of shipments of gardenias to San Francisco, and that his customer writes that they reached there in condition to be handled profitably.

Weiland & Risch say that they have discovered, in figuring on their new range of houses, that while glass is cheap, the man who makes the pipe is still holding out for the old figure.

G. H. Pieser, president of the Kennicott Bros. Co., is at West Baden. Max Ringier, salesman for the firm, has been at home for a week, threatened with pneumonia.

At Peter Reinberg's city store it is stated that every month this season has shown an increase as compared with last season up to March 1, but that there has been a falling off in the last ten days. March naturally will not compare with a year ago for any one, because Easter came in March last year, if for no other reason.

Bassett & Washburn say that the spring crop of Beauties is on and that there will be no scarcity before Easter.

Vaughan & Sperry say that violets are doing much better than last week, singles being not so abundant, and the call being met by Marie Louise from Rhinebeck. The violet has become an important item with the commission houses this season because of the increased shipments of eastern stock.

At E. H. Hunt's they say it is an indication of the hard usage a greenhouse owner gives rubber hose that the Revere has caught on as it has; the best hose lasts such a short time that all the growers are glad to try a new brand.

Scheiden & Schoos are busy propagating their Lawson seedling to work up a big stock for next year. It is not yet named.

Zech & Mann say this week started with a run of good shipping orders.

The E. F. Winterson Co. is working at full pressure, and overtime, to get things in shape for the rush of seed and plant business that will come with a few warm days.

Philip Schupp, of Budlong's, reports carnations cleaning up satisfactorily, if at cheap prices, and says that he has no concern as to roses.

Jensen & Dekema say that the business in rooted cuttings of carnations is this year much ahead of any previous season with them. Not counting the sales of Defiance, which are taking up all the stock they can propagate as fast as they get it ready, the sales on other varieties by February 1 equaled the business done in the entire season last year. Mr. Jensen says the three varieties most called for are White Enchantress, Winsor and Beacon. Arrangements have been made for the dissemination of W. N. Rudd's white seedling next year, stock being already on the place.

As indicating the size of the carnation crops, it is worthy of special note that in one day the Poehlmann Bros. Co. cut 26,500 carnations.

received invitations to attend, but most of them had previous engagements.

M. C. & J. E. Hauswirth report a good business in the Auditorium Annex. They are receiving many letters and telegrams from those in the trade in other cities who have orders to deliver in Chicago.

There have been a number of visitors in town this week, one of them being B. Myers, of W. J. Palmer & Son, Lancaster, N. Y., who is getting figures on material for three new greenhouses. Other visitors were J. E. Pollworth and W. A. Kennedy, Milwaukee; R. Latham and Hugh Will, Minneapolis; Mrs. A. L. Glaser, Dubuque, Iowa.

The Market.

The week opens with spring weather, following last week's rains, and the last signs of winter are obliterated. Every variety of stock is abundant now, including roses. Beauties have fallen to 25 cents as top, for the daily receipts are enormous, and so the prop to the general market has been knocked from under. With the Beauties have fallen Maids and Brides, and, in fact, all the teas, the lower grades especially suffering. If the fine, warm weather should continue and the sunshine come again, the depression in rose prices before the week ends must be considerable.

Carnations are just as numerous and just as far below their value as ever. The finest have had to be cleaned up at $10 per thousand at times. Of violets there is no end; 100 boxes sometimes on a train, and sometimes more. The top figure is 40 cents, and only a few fetch that. Thousands go at 25 cents on arrival; not the overnights. There will not be as much greenhouse building up the Hudson as usual this year.

Everything else holds at about last week's quotations, and there is enough of everything, lilies, valley, bulbous stock of all kinds, and green goods, and still some first-class retail stores are reaping a harvest, for their prices remain about the same to the public with the mazuma, who consider it not the thing to ever ask the price of anything. There are a lot of these millionaires in the city, these carte blanche godsenders that make high rents possible and $8,000 to $12,000 stores no dream, but actual facts. These are the fellows who make money easily and, fortunately, spend a lot of it on flowers.

If you compare the prices asked by the leading retailers today with the wholesale prices of flowers you would be surprised. In contradistinction to this, look at the quotations from a Brooklyn Friday city paper, by one of the florists there, who believes it pays to handle immense quantities and at a minimum profit, and who does this week after week all through this season, and within ten days will have 100,000 hardy roses ready for the early suburbanite. Here is his announcement: "100,000 violets, with cord and tassel, 10 to 20 cents a bunch. Yellow daffodils, regular 50 cents, now 10 cents a dozen. Fresh-cut carnations, varieties specified, 2 cents to 3 cents each. Freesia, 10 cents a dozen. Table ferns, 2 cents; kentia palms, 3 cents," and so on through the list. How can he sell at such low prices? Ask the middlemen, who close out of necessity all that comes to them within twenty-four hours, and the growers, who must have something to cover the expense of this, their most strenuous season since the New York wholesale market was established.

Club Meeting.

The New York Florists' Club met Monday evening, March 9. There were about fifty members present. Mr. Sheridan reported for the dinner committee, which received the thanks of the club. Fifty tickets were sold and of the forty-eight present, thirty-six were club members. The outing committee made an encouraging report of progress and the club authorized the addition of the new members mentioned last week.

Some fine exhibits graced the tables. William Eccles, of Oyster Bay, received a cultural certificate for what was possibly the finest vase of Beacon carnations ever staged in the city. Such size and quality have never been excelled. Arthur T. Boddington received the thanks of the club for a fine plant of Primula Sieboldii Queen of the Whites. W. A. Manda exhibited a vase of seedling No. 20, a light pink carnation which scored seventy-six points, and Anton Schultheis showed several plants of the new Baby Rambler rose, Apple Blossom, which the committee gave a certificate of merit and requested opportunity to view again. Mr. Schultheis practically controls this variety, has several thousand plants and will not offer it before next fall to the trade.

Professor L. C. Corbett, of Washington, delivered his interesting and exhaustive lecture on "Soils," which appears in this issue, and held the close attention of his audience for an hour. ### Various Notes.

Now come the auctions. William Elliott & Sons open on St. Patrick's day, March 17. Cleary's Horticultural Co., on Vesey street, will commence distribution at the same time, and before the end of the month the Fruit Auction Co., on Franklin street, will make a daily 7

a. m. bid for the patronage of the plant distributors, and so inaugurate a new venture which is surely revolutionary, but to which many of the leading growers seem to give their support.

F. H. Traendly and John Young will attend the rose show in Chicago March 25 to 27 and several others are likely to join them.

It has been good news to several florists whose funds have been tied up, that the Knickerbocker Trust Co. will resume March 27.

H. E. Froment says he is receiving nearly a thousand special Beauties a day now.

The Van Praag Florist Co. has been incorporated with $500 capital stock. The incorporators are Marcus Van Praag, Edward McInnes and James F. Carroll.

Knight & Struck have in view the control of the new cypripedium, Gay Gordon, for America.

The holiday next Tuesday ought to help business some. Notwithstanding the sentiment against colored things, the green carnation will be much in evidence, as well as shamrocks.

Frederick W. Kelsey, of Orange, N. J., the nurseryman, was hobnobbing with governors last week at the opening of the new tunnel between Jersey and New York and at the banquet, at Sherry's, in the evening.

E. Howard Smith, of Hazleton, Pa., has leased the Millang store, at 50 West Twenty-ninth street, and engaged in the wholesale plant business, with his son as bookkeeper and J. H. Blauvelt as manager. He will continue his retail business in Hazleton.

H. Kenney, of Brooklyn, is building this summer in Flatbush a most convenient and extensive headquarters for his wire design factory and for the storage of moss, which he preserves in burlap bales so there is no waste, always having over a thousand of these on hand.

sign "To let, whole or part of store." It is said the rental is $12,000 a year. The trend of retail trade seems up town, and yet below Twenty-eighth street are some of the handsomest flower shops in the world. The chain of stores idea in our business does not amount apparently to all its advocates expected of it. Many have learned by experience the value of concentration and the fact of individuality. The permanent success of the retail florists' business is based upon personality. There are some brilliant proofs of it on Fifth avenue and Broadway. There is no adage more appropriate than "Let well enough alone."

Richard Vincent, Jr., White Marsh, Md., with his wife and part of his family, sails April 4 for a European business and pleasure trip.

W. H. Donohoe has the house and synagogue decoration March 22 for the Jacobson wedding, a notable affair. Last week a unique bouquet for an actor was made up by Mr. Donohoe, consisting of asparagus, with eigers and cigarettes in place of flowers. Mr. Donohoe was entertaining this week the brother of Harry C. Rowe, of Chicago, who arrived Saturday from Europe and who has done service as a colonel in the English army in South Africa.

John King Duer will have the usual yard exhibit in the rear of his store this spring. It is a great convenience for Easter and a perpetual delight to the dwellers in the great apartment houses on every side of his handsome store.

M. A. Bowe's force is now larger than at any time since he established himself in the heart of the city and his artistic work at the Shontz wedding is the talk of the town. He numbers many millionaires on his list of steadies and badly needs enlarged space for his growing business.

Millang Bros. seem quite settled and at home in their new quarters on West Twenty-eighth street, one of the handsomest wholesale cut flower stores in the country.

Ford Bros. say 20,000 carnations a day is easy and they often dispose of that quantity before breakfast.

Wm. Elliott & Sons say they look forward to their most successful spring auction season this year. They say the gardening fever is stronger than ever and interest in the first sale, March 17, more pronounced than last year.

March 19 and 20 an exhibition of flowers and plants under the auspices of the Gardeners' Society of America will be held at Allaires hall, Third avenue and Seventeenth street. W. E. Maynard, of Arlington, N. J., is secretary. J. P. Sorenson, of Stamford, Conn., is manager.

Fred Lautenschlager, of Chicago, arrived in New York Monday evening and was a visitor at the New York Florists' Club meeting. He is on his way to Boston.

A. J. Guttman spent Monday at Lynbrook, N. Y., celebrating at Charles Weber's the birthday of Mrs. Weber.

The formation of a bowling club to represent the New York Florists' Club at Niagara Falls is in the hands of Vice-President Marshall, and a dozen bowlers will begin practice at once. President Traendly made the generous offer of a free trip to the convention to the five members making the highest average and constituting the team, providing that in the practice games, deciding the membership, an average of 155 or better be maintained.

The first meeting of the prospective orchid society, which has been simmering for months, will be held at the American Institute Saturday, March 14, when all interested are invited cordially to attend. An exhibit will be made from 3 to 7 p. m. Sander & Sons, of London, have furnished $100 guarantee and many of the leading orchidists of Europe have signified their intention of joining, in addition to the prominent orchid growers of this country and a large number of the expert private gardeners.

Celia Murray, of Montreal, and Mrs. McEwan, assistant secretary of Mount Royal cemetery of that city, are in town and Harry Bunyard has been doing the honors. J. AUSTIN SHAW.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.

T. J. Totten has decided not to disseminate his grand scarlet carnation this season, owing chiefly to the demand for the blooms, which have brought $1.50 per dozen at retail through the entire season. The new houses, recently built, will be planted with this variety.

Henry Schrade has a yellow seedling, from Mrs. Patten and a seedling that is highly promising, being very free, of good form and an excellent keeper. This is its second year.

Speaking of lilies for summer flowering, T. J. Totten says one of the handsomest beds is made of L. tenuifolium, with an edging or border of pennisetum.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The market went to pieces last week. The wholesale houses were loaded down with everything in season, with a great decline in prices, and it looks as though the florists are going to feel the effects of Lent more this year than last, as the majority of the retailers reported a dull week; funeral work was about the only thing that helped out. Blooming plants, though, are selling fairly well with the uptown florists.

In looking over the wholesale market we find a glut in bulbous stock. Valley, Von Sions, jonquils, callas, Dutch hyacinths, tulips and freesias are all overabundant. The same must be said of carnations in all varieties and grades. The fine weather brought in an avalanche of violets, all California. These sold as low as 10 cents per hundred. Roses, which have been scarce of late, piled up alarmingly, showing that the demand was slow. Prices can hardly be quoted correctly, as it depends on how many are bought.

Smilax, asparagus, adiantum and other greens also are plentiful.

Various Notes.

A. S. Halstead, president of the St. Clair Floral Co., Belleville, Ill., was a caller last week and reports a good run of trade.

Martin Moran, many years in the employ of Mrs. M. M. Ayers, has taken a position with the St. Louis Seed Co. His many friends in the trade will miss his genial face at the wholesale markets.

Frank M. Ellis, who left here a year ago to operate a banana plantation in Panama, states in a letter that he will be in St. Louis the latter part of this month to pay a visit to his family and friends in the trade.

Mrs. Smith, mother of W. C. Smith, left for Milwaukee last week to visit her daughter, Mrs. H. V. Hunkel, who is ill. Mrs. Hunkel's husband is of the well known firm of Holton & Hunkel.

The Riessen Floral Co. had a busy week. Lent so far has not cut any figure with them.

George A. Kuhl, of Pekin, Ill., is a visitor this week, attending the spring flower show.

Report comes from Edwardsville, Ill., that Mrs. Annmann, wife of J. F. Ammann, is very ill.

J. F. Wilcox, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, is sending to this market a fine cut of Brides, Maids, American Beauties and carnations.

John Steidle, a member of both the Florists' Club and Horticultural Society, who has been appointed state vice-president of the S. A. F. by President Traendly, will soon begin active work to get the boys in line for the convention and for new members for the society.

The St. Louis Florists' Club's last meeting in the old quarters in the Burlington building this week Thursday promises to be well attended. In connection with this meeting the annual rose exhibition will take place.

Walter Retzer, of the St. Louis Seed Co., reports a heavy week's business in seeds of all kinds. Pressure of business alone keeps them from making an exhibit at the spring flower show this week.

The St. Louis Horticultural Society's second spring flower show opened Tuesday, March 10, for three days.

OWENSBORO, KY.—The Nanz Floral Co. has recently made a lease on the store at the corner of Main and Allen streets. The building will be remodeled, with a large window, to supply all the necessities for an up-to-date flower store.

BANNERS ELK, N. C.

F. W. Richards & Co., who have a large business here in the lumber trade and who supply a great many florists with galax leaves, ferns and leucothoe sprays, have separated the two departments of their business. The department which has to do with florists will hereafter be conducted in the name of the North Carolina Evergreen Co. There will be no change in management; F. M. Richards, who has had charge of the evergreen department for eight years, will continue to handle that end of the business as heretofore. They send out many millions of galax leaves each season, having customers in almost every state, from Maine to California, and the galax leaf industry has grown to be one of the important factors in this region, furnishing employment for a large number of pickers.

The Market.

Trade the early part of last week was quiet, but there was a decided improvement the latter part of the week. Stock of all kinds is being received in quantity and made it an easy matter to fill orders, large or small, with good material. Carnations remain about as before—plenty for everybody, and then some more. Sweet peas are received in large quantities and sell well. Roses are being sent in more freely, some finding their way to the street fakers.

Various Notes.

Quantities of flowers of all kinds were

The Market.

The demand is lifeless. There is practically nothing doing as far as the stores are concerned. The fakers have the full swing of the market, and they are making prices to suit themselves. Some of the wholesalers report that the supply of flowers is beginning to shorten up, but we all hope that some morning soon we shall come down to business and find the storemen in the market as they usually are. Some growers report that carnations are shortening up, and the glut cannot last much longer, and roses are reported the same way, but we will make no predictions until that condition is a little more visible to the naked eye.

Various Notes.

Max Rudolph is confined to the hospital, where he underwent a minor operation. He is getting along nicely and will be out in a few more days.

James Allan has returned from a three weeks' stay in Boston, where he went to bury his father.

The Market.

March came in like a lion, but turned out to be a rather tame one. The weather has been all that could be expected—plenty of sun, fairly warm, etc.

Business remains about the same as last reported. There is plenty of work, but the people are not spending as much for flowers as last year.

With the exception of roses, there is plenty of stock on the market. Carnations are more than plentiful; this is especially true of the lighter colored varieties. The darker shades of pink and the dark red are about equal to the demand. This is just a reverse of the conditions of former years. Bulbous stock is still piling up. Tulips, especially, are too plentiful.

From the way the florists are loading up with the green coloring fluids, there will be a big demand for white carnations just before March 17.

Smilax and other greens are plentiful.

Blooming plants are selling satisfactorily. Many fine azaleas are seen at some of the retail places. Hyacinths in pans are also selling well.

There will be all sorts of lilies on the market at Easter, some very fine ones and some very poor ones, just as in former years. Some of the plants will be very short of stem. Giganteum is the only variety that is giving universal satisfaction.

Club Meeting.

On the evening of March 4 the Detroit Florists' Club held its first meeting since the special meeting held January 21.

There was but a small attendance; still, we had a good, live meeting.

There was no particular subject assigned for the evening, so the talk was somewhat at random.

S. S. Skidelsky was at the meeting, and the target for many questions, mostly concerning carnations. When asked his opinion as to whether Lawson was running out, he thought Lawson could be grown as good as ever. He said the fault with some growers was that they propagated from the same stock year in and year out, never once changing their stock. In his opinion, Lawson and the varieties derived from it are the best strain of carnations we have ever had. No variety has ever been so universally grown: Not only in this country, but in all parts of Europe, is it a favorite.

"There is no cause for despair," says Mr. Skidelsky when asked about business. Business is getting better throughout the country. The financial stringency has brought down the price of building material, and this seems to be serving as an inducement to many of the florists to build.

Speaking of carnations, Ferdinand Kolbe said that the growers cannot be too careful about selecting their cuttings. His opinion is that this is the reason many growers never have much success with carnations. Only strong, healthy cuttings should be propagated.

Ex-President Dilger spoke on the trouble the growers in the west are experiencing with so-called bud-rot. This part of the country is not suffering from this trouble as yet, but the chances are it will in time, says Mr. Dilger, and now is the time when we should study this disease and be prepared to fight it.

During the evening Mr. Skidelsky showed that he is a strong advocate of inside culture of carnations. He also spoke of the danger of overfeeding carnations.

Secretary Sullivan asked Mr. Skidelsky to favor the club with an address at some future meeting, and he promised to do so. He will select his own subject.

The question box was next opened.

"What is the outlook in regard to lilies for Easter?" was asked. From present indications there will be plenty of lilies at Easter, was the general opinion.

The question, "What can we do to make our meetings more interesting, thereby assuring a larger attendance, especially of the older florists?" brought forth a lengthy discussion on this subject. The severe weather this winter, of course, has had much to do with the small attendance at the meetings as compared with former years, but lack of interest is the main reason.

We have as energetic a president as any club in the country, but he has hardly had a chance to do much. Owing to a delay early last fall in the elections, the president did not take the chair until the season was well advanced and the Christmas rush was upon us. Then, shortly after the holidays, he was handicapped by sickness. So we could not lay the blame on the president.

Suggestions were made by different members, and the final result was the appointment of Hubert Pierce, A. Pochelon and Robert Rahaley to act as an essay committee for the year. This committee is to arrange a program similar to last year's, the object being to have some subject come up for discussion every meeting night. Essays by local and out-of-town talent will be one of the features. Debates by members will also be arranged for.

It was the opinion of all present that there will be something doing at the meetings hereafter until the warm weather drives us out into the outdoors.

A vase of Winsor was shown by B. Schroeter. These elicited much favorable comment. The fine color and long, strong stems were what caught the eye.

R. E. Hall, of Reed & Keller, was an interested listener at the meeting.

MRS. JARDINE

A FREE, STRONG GROWTH, WITH GOOD FOLIAGE. A VARIETY THAT CAN BE EASILY GROWN. LARGE FLOWERS ON LONG STEMS. DELICIOUS FRAGRANCE. DISTINCT, PLEASING COLOR THAT WILL SELL AT SIGHT. A ROSE THAT WILL HOLD ITS COLOR IN THE DULL DAYS OF DECEMBER AND JANUARY.

MRS. JARDINE has all these characteristics, and, in addition, is of so perfect a form that it can be used either in the bud or half expanded flower. The color is a bright rosy pink, shading in the outer petals to salmon pink, and, even in January, when Bridesmaids and Killarney lose their color, Mrs. Jardine is as bright as in October or March.

We extend a cordial invitation to everyone interested in this New Rose to visit our Nurseries and see it growing.

MRS. JARDINE has been awarded Two Silver Medals, numerous Certificates, and successfully stood the best test which any novelty can possibly have in passing unanimously, in December, the Award Committee of the New York Florists' Club after an exhaustive examination of the growing plants, with a score of 92 points.

MONTREAL.

Current Comment.

Spring is supposed to be with us again, but there is yet a lot of snow to remind us of winter. Rain or sleet are the probabilities for the present week, and, unfortunately, it looks as if they might be right for once.

Funeral orders have kept us all busy recently, and trade is splendid, with plenty of plants and flowers and also a large demand for them. Tulips, daffodils, hyacinths, primulas, lilacs and narcissi, in pots, are seen in all the stores and sell for 50 cents and upwards. Violets, valley, sweet peas, roses, carnations, Beauties and freesias are among the popular flowers.

J. Bennett, of Lachine, is shipping some fine violets and double pink tulips at present.

A. Derynck has left Lachine to be with his father in Montreal.

Campbell's are doing a fine lot of funeral work whenever the writer calls there. Their other lines are just as busy.

T. White, of England, is at present employed by J. Bennett.

Mr. Manton paid us a flying visit recently and called on all the boys.

Miss Carmichael is recovering from her serious illness and she expects to be well enough to take charge of her store again within the next week or so.

Easter preparations at the greenhouses are being rushed and everything so far looks promising.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

There has not been any marked improvement in the cut flower trade in the last week. Prices remain about the same. A good supply of carnations and violets is now coming in. Violets can hardly be given away just now; there is a regular glut on. There is plenty of bulbous stock coming in just now, retailing at 50 cents per dozen. Roses bring $1.50 per dozen retail. There is a good supply of sweet peas.

E. H. Chamberlain is handling some fine azaleas and pots of daffodils. He says that the Winsor carnation has been in good demand for the last month or so; the color is certainly grand.

H. A. Jahn exhibited flowers of Lloyd at the recent show of the Boston Florists' and Gardeners' Club February 25, besides other promising seedlings.

S. S. Peckham is having a large cut of carnations and also is busy shipping carnation cuttings, handling some thirty varieties or so.

R. H. Woodhouse will have a large batch of bedding plants for the spring trade. He reports business as fair.

E. Y. Peirce's carnations are in fine shape.

From all indications there will be a good supply of flowers for Easter.

DENVER.

Carnations have been coming into the market in heavy quantities, with the result that prices are about as low as they ever get at this time of the year; but at present writing it looks as if this condition will be only temporary. There also is a great deal of other stock, of some kinds more than enough. Beauties are in sufficient supply, while tea roses are abundant and of good quality. Tulips, daffodils, hyacinths and all bulb stock, on account of the spring weather we have had, are coming in in large quantities.

The Lenten season may curtail business, although as yet it has not seriously affected it. Funeral business has been brisk during the last two or three weeks, owing to quite a number of prominent people having passed away. But there has been little going on in the way of decorations or entertaining so far this season.

Thomas Long, of the Elitch-Long Greenhouses, has returned from a business trip east. E. S. K.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The situation has altered decidedly since last week. The supply still exceeds the demand, at times to such an extent as to create an extremely weak market. American Beauty roses, which were extremely scarce at the close of the pre-Lenten season, have become so much more plentiful that prices have fallen one-third on the specials. They nearly all seem to be specials, and are so fine that at listed quotations Richmond meets with little support. Brides, Maids and Killarney are fine, the best continuing to hold the prices of a week ago.

The overproduction of carnations is as great as during the last half of February. Enchantress is still the principal sufferer, this variety being better value for the money than anything on the market today. Sweet peas are also in over-supply. The poorer grades bring no price at all, but good flowers on long stems command a fair figure.

The quantity of left-over flowers that went to the street on Saturday was amazing. There are conflicting reports as to how the Greeks fared with this stock, but it was certainly of better average quality than they are accustomed to handling.

With the advent of Lent the supply of bulbous flowers has fallen off. A fair demand has sprung up for single daffodils, which keeps the price steady. Tulips are not much sought after; even Couronne d'Or remains unnoticed. Violets, while cheap, are in fair demand, especially good singles. The supply of gardenias is light. Cattleyas appear less plentiful. Valley has been in moderate demand. There is no especial call for greens. Shipping business is fair at times.

A Man of Resource.

It is generally admitted that a business man must have certain qualities: Energy, integrity, truthfulness, resource are generally admitted to be essential. A well-known retailer of this city (I will not tell you whether his initials are the first, middle or the last letters of the alphabet) tells an excellent story illustrating this point. A certain shop had an order for a plateau of pink tulips. At that particular time it so chanced that pink tulips were not to be had anywhere. The proprietor, having promised his customer a plateau of pink tulips, resolved that the plateau of pink tulips should be forthcoming. He therefore mixed a mild solution of red ink, dipped white tulips carefully in it, made his plateau (the tulips were a beautiful pink) and no one was any the wiser. This is resource.

Samtman; whether it be a contract to supply the Leo Niessen Co. with gilt-edged Beauties or the payment of the annual dues at the Florists' Club, it is always Myers & Samtman. Of course Phil wanted to see something fine, so he repaired straightway to Wyndmoor, where the coming debutante which bears that name is flourishing under the care of Messrs. Myers & Samtman. Wyndmoor has been described as "a cheerful pink" rose, and is, as REVIEW readers know, planted in two houses, one a propagating house, the other a broad, even-span affair admitting more light than the narrower house. In both cases Wyndmoor is planted in benches, and in both cases it is throwing up strong canes from the base that promise to give flowers that will attract attention at the coming rose show at Chicago. It will be remembered that while Wyndmoor is practically in its first year in quantity, Myers & Samtman were able to furnish something over 1,000 blooms for a private ball given on the day after Christmas. The firm believes that they should make what the Belgians describe as an honest test and will therefore try Wyndmoor for one more season, sending it out in the spring of 1909, if, as now seems assured, all goes well. To test the rose under various conditions, a few plants have already been sent to two growers whose soil differs from that part of Montgomery county. It is understood that their report promises to be most favorable, verifying the firm's claim that Wyndmoor is a rose that will do well for anybody anywhere.

Various Notes.

Edward J. Fancourt, secretary of the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co., returned last week from a successful business trip. Mr. Fancourt spoke of the great improvement shown in the cultivation of flowers under glass in the south. At New Orleans, he found Beauties growing vigorously, a thing that was believed impossible some years ago. At another place he commented on a fine bench of Enchantress grown in a clay soil, another surprise. Mr. Fancourt believes that the production of this fine stock will stimulate the demand in the sections where it is produced.

BUFFALO.

The Market.

We can truthfully report that business has been good for the last week. Funeral work has been especially good, and the old saying again came true, that "it never rains but it pours." As a result stock has been well cleaned up. Weather conditions have been in our favor, as we have had mild weather, with an occasional rain. Everybody is now figuring hard on the outcome of the Easter stock. It will indeed be a gamble this year, the season being late.

Club Meeting.

March 6 was the banner night for the Buffalo Florists' Club. Forty-eight members assembled for the occasion, and, from the reports of the older members, it was the largest meeting ever held by the club. The meeting was opened by President Neubeck, and, after some other business, the election of officers took place. In the election of the president, Charles Reichart withdrew in favor of Charles Sandiford. Mr. Sandiford accepted the office, and, at the suggestion of President Neubeck, he was escorted to the platform by William Scott. David J. Scott was elected vice-president; J.

Rowland Cloudsley, secretary; Wallace Biss, treasurer, and Emil Brucker, financial secretary. Three directors were then elected, namely, William F. Kasting, A. Adams and Charles Keitsch.

The meeting was then adjourned.

Through the energetic ability of the three men on the entertainment committee, we were then favored with a splendid program of sports. We wish to mention that it was not the idea of the club to induce the many members to come simply for the entertainment, but to show the boys the enthusiasm aroused and assure them that the organization is still and always will be a florists' club. Henceforth the night will be set aside for business, with the occasional entertainment. However, the program arranged was complete in every detail and thoroughly enjoyed. Mr. Slattery afforded as much pleasure by his actions as referee as did the talent. After this program everybody adjourned to the banquet hall, where a very enjoyable spread was prepared.

L. H. Neubeck acted as toastmaster, seated at the same table with past officers, including William Scott, William F. Kasting, Charles Keitsch, William Peak and William Legg. Mr. Neubeck opened the ceremonies with a few remarks pertaining to the past, present and prospective condition of the club. He then called on the newly elected president, Charles Sandiford, who gave an interesting talk. William Scott was next to be called on, but the occasion was too much for his strength, and he was forced to retire. A standing toast was then given for him, as the oldest living ex-president of the club. Several others were called on, among whom were George E. McClure and William F. Kasting. Mr. McClure was called on to represent the younger generation of the club. He spoke in grand style and laid out a few plans which, if followed, would make the club one of interest as well as business. Mr. Kasting then spoke, touching on the coming convention, and also on extending an invitation to the National Rose Society. His remarks were roundly applauded. The toastmaster then closed the banquet, and everybody went home highly satisfied. The attendance at the banquet numbered seventy-five, including several visitors, among whom were the White Bros., of Gasport; G. L. Graham, of Bradford, Pa., and Mr. McCarthy, of Lockport.

Various Notes.

R. J. Irwin, with H. H. Berger & Co., was in town on his maiden trip for the firm. Although on his maiden trip, Mr. Irwin has traveled the territory from end to end, and his many friends assure him of success. R. A. S.

MASON CITY, IOWA.—William Magner, an employee of the Kemble Floral Co., recently met with a peculiar accident, which may result in the loss of the sight of one of his eyes. When he happened to step on the blade of a hoe in the basement of the company's building, the handle of the hoe flew up and a nail in the handle penetrated his eyeball.

I CONSIDER the REVIEW the best trade paper published, of its class. It is brimful of good things every week—bright, breezy, bountiful, better than the best. Long may it prosper.—LEWIS R. ALLEN, Murphysboro, Ill.

The Picture's the Thing in Selling Flowers

TASTY printed matter, reproducing flowers from photographs, will create increased demand for the flowers themselves. If the photographic reproductions are made in the natural colors, by modern processes, an even greater increase in demand will result.

The live and up-to-date florist has stationery and printed matter in harmony with his stock. The McFarland organization makes such stationery for this kind of florists. The average job printer cannot begin to do it—he doesn't know how and hasn't the facilities.

The surpassing equipment and trained men at our service enable us to turn out work of a quality not obtainable elsewhere at any price—whether on a job of 500 postcards or 100,000 big catalogues.

Here are some specimens with prices. Over 10,000 photographs of other good subjects from which to choose are awaiting your call. Further information cheerfully supplied.

There's a form of printed matter your business needs. Ask The McFarland Publicity Service!

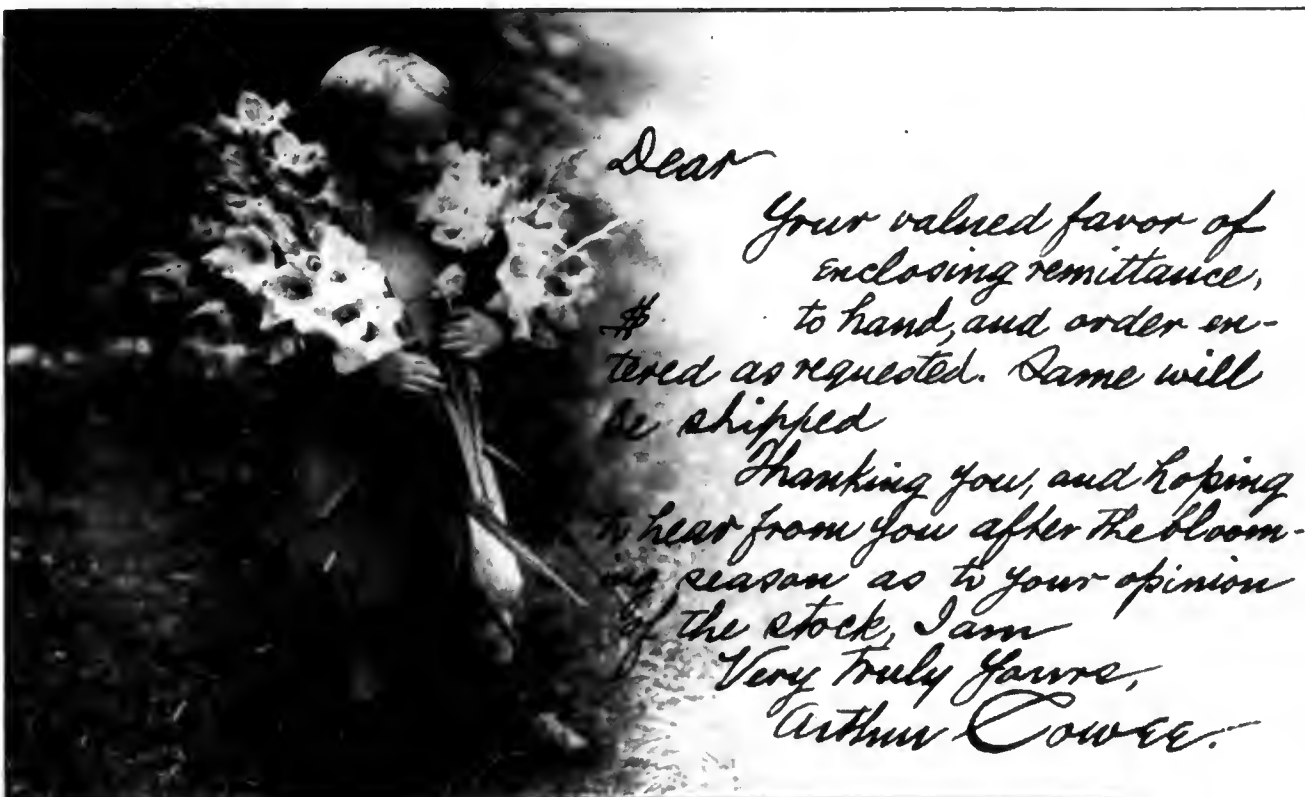

A couple of cents spent in giving every order the courtesy of acknowledgment will help you to secure additional business from chance and regular customers. Postcards are the ideal form.

Price f.o.b. Harrisburg: First thousand, $15; additional thousands, $3.50 each. Cash with the order.

We have in stock a large number of engravings suitable for the illustration of postcards. When these are used, with a type instead of an engraved message, we can give better figures.

Price f.o.b. Harrisburg: First thousand, $6.50; additional thousands, $3 each. Cash with the order.

Postcards are a splendid medium through which to tell the people where you are and what you sell. All the back and one-half of the front of the card may be used for your message.

Price f.o.b. Harrisburg: First thousand, $15; additional thousands, $3.50 each. Cash with the order.

In our stock of over 10,000 original horticultural photographs, there are thousands which no florist in your section has used. These photos enable us to give endless variety to postcards.

Only a few examples of our designs can be shown hereon. Write us, and we will submit others to suit your needs.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Considering that we are now fairly in Lent, business remains good and supplies are clearing up better than might have been expected. Prices show no special decline except in the case of roses and bulbous stock, which are arriving more abundantly. Carnations continue plentiful, but clean up a little better. The drug is, as usual, in low grade goods. There is not much trouble in moving those of the best quality. The carnations now arriving in Boston are superior in quality to any seen in preceding years. Single violets are now being pulled out by some of the growers to make room for tomatoes and cucumbers, which are in many cases run as a summer crop. As a consequence, they continue to sell well, and the same can be said of doubles. Violets are selling better on the whole than any other flowers.

Bulbous stock is abundant and prices, as a rule, are not profitable. Lily of the valley sells rather better. Callas and Easter lilies are not in heavy demand. Mignonette, snapdragon, wall-flower, candytuft, stocks and other miscellaneous stock meets with an uncertain call. Sweet peas, however, continue to sell quite well.

Various Notes.

Eber Holmes, of Montrose Green-houses, will be the essayist at the next meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, March 17. His subject will be "Indoor Commercial Rose Culture." W. H. Elliott and others have promised to take part in the discussion. Some good exhibits are expected and rose night promises to be as good a drawing card as was carnation night.

The annual banquet of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club has been postponed to April 1, in order not to interfere with the meeting of the American Rose Society, which will take away a number from this section on the original date planned. There will be splendid music success of the recent one at Park street has encouraged the promoters to attempt larger things another year and already several valuable cups have been promised.

Among the cars on exhibition at the Boston automobile show, now being held in Mechanics' building, is one from Peirce Bros., built exclusively by the members of the firm. It is a long and substantial one, to be used in hauling their big quantities of Easter lilies, azaleas and cut flowers to their customers.

Robert B. Leuchars, for many years a prominent landscape architect, and who had laid out many fine estates in the east, died at Brookline March 4, in his eighty-first year.

William E. Doyle, who was the first of the retailers to handle Killarney rose in quantity, still finds it the most popular rose on the market. He handles large quantities of high grade blooms of it.

Sidney Hoffman's windows, at his Massachusetts avenue store, are always attractive. He is just now showing some beautiful specimen plants of rhododendrons, marguerites, genistas, rambler roses and other seasonable flowers. Evergreens in tubs are one of his specialties and he sells large quantities of these.

A. P. Calder, of Stoughton, is a successful sweet pea grower and is supplying several prominent stores in Boston at present.

Welch Bros. are quite optimistic as to Easter trade and look for splendid business in spite of prevailing depression in the flower market.

William Sim's sweet peas are, if anything, superior to last year, which is saying a good deal. Certainly no such flowers of Florence Denzer and Christmas Pink were before seen in Boston. He is picking many thousands a week.

Dobbins & Shannon are successful growers of Princess violets. The flowers they are handling at Music Hall market are of superb quality.

The large growers of Easter lilies report their crops as coming along all right, but that all have had a larger proportion of disease than usual.

John K. M. L. Farquhar says the chief cause of so much disease in Japanese longiflorums is due to too early lifting. In northern Japan the bulbs should not be dug before the middle of September, which would mean November delivery in America. The Formosa and southern Japanese bulbs ripen a month earlier and are more likely to give satisfactory results here.

A good audience listened to President Kenyon L. Butterfield, of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, Amherst, when he spoke on "Agricultural Education" at Horticultural hall March 7.

W. N. CRAIG.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

At Sandy Hill, N. Y., J. L. Watkins & Son is the title of the new firm, which is composed of the son and daughter of the founder, who recently joined the big majority, leaving a snug business of thirty years' standing.

H. L. Crandell, of Glens Falls, N. Y., remarked that notwithstanding the financial stringency he has found a good demand for choice stock. The new addition of 3,500 feet and a handsome office makes a complete square.

Baker Bros., of Rutland, Vt., have an up-to-date plant and successfully combine the unusual trinity of farmers, florists and market gardeners.

A. J. Courcelle, of Rutland, Vt., reports a good season for funeral work.

Geo. E. Hunt, of Rutland, Vt., says he has no kick coming.

L. C. Holton, of Bennington, Vt., is sanguine as to the future, although he says this is the first quiet season he has experienced in twenty years.

A. J. Schmutz, of North Adams, Mass., has made quite a change in his plant, making it very attractive. He says the shekels did not roll his way quite so fast this season as heretofore, but there is a good time coming.

I met E. A. Richards, of Greenfield, Mass., just returning from the big carnation show at Boston. He said the exhibits were all that could be desired and worth going a day's journey to see. Harry Sinclair made a fine showing with the President Seelye, so much so that a leading grower made a special trip to see the stock growing and placed a banner order, with the promise of an addition as soon as he reached home: I paid a visit to Northampton and met H. W. Field, who was kept home with a heavy cold. He says Seelye is stronger than White Enchantress. Violet Princess of Wales is in fine form, but undoubtedly the new Boston, of William Sim, will find space here, as the big college trade demands all the newest and best that can be produced.

Joe Beach, of South Hadley Falls, Mass., was, at last reports, wending his way home from the sunny south, where he has been sojourning for a while, with his side partner. Meanwhile Joe, junior, has taken care that nothing suffered during the absence of the head.

J. F. Huss, of Hartford, Conn., was taking cuttings of that fine old favorite, Chorizema cordatum splendens, at the time of my visit, and we both agreed that this pretty and attractive plant was worthy of wider recognition than it receives here. It is easy of culture and is fairly smothered with bloom from early until late. Clanthus Dampieri is another old-time favorite. But Alpine plants are the chief hobby of our genial friend, who glories in reciting the names of a hundred or more Alpines alone, to say nothing of the grand collection of hardy ferns. Among the newest arrivals is Grammitis leptophylla, an annual of Europe; also a new nephrolepis from out the REVIEW. Each issue contains something of importance to us.

The first winter in our new greenhouses has been a decided success. We have grown lots of fine mums, carnations and roses, besides bulb stock and bedding and house plants, and owe a great part of our success to what we gleaned from the REVIEW and "The Florists' Manual."

Since January 1, 1908, we have erected a new house, 7x60, which is now full of lettuce, which promises a good crop. We will use it for asters, and later for mums.

STOKE & STOKE.

Great Bend, Kan.

STORED CANNAS ROTTING.

Could you kindly advise me as to the cause of our cannas rotting? Though we have tried several distinct methods of storing, and our stock was thoroughly good when lifted, it has always rewarded us by two-thirds being rotten when sorting for planting again. Three years ago we tried leaving them under the benches in the greenhouses, but they were growing superfluous shoots in the beginning of January. Then we tried shelving them, but they seemed to shrivel up. So this year we tried placing them in boxes in cool, dry cellars, and they appeared to be all right in December, but on sorting over this month we find just about two-thirds rotten. You would greatly oblige us by correcting our methods and showing the reasons for our poor results.

J. B.

Many growers have trouble with the wintering of canna roots. In the fall, when the plants are killed by frost, we prefer not to dig them at once, but leave them a few days, until the sapiness has dried out of the stems. Dig on a warm, sunny day and let the clumps stand sufficiently long to dry out well. We have always stored our roots on shelves in a shed where the temperature will vary from 38 to 50 degrees in winter and have had little trouble with rotting. A cellar which is well ventilated during mild weather and which is dry, without having much fire heat, also keeps them well. A dry atmosphere is necessary; otherwise the moisture will start the plants growing and also produce moldiness and decay. A dry cellar which will keep potatoes well should also answer for cannas.

We hope you do not shake away all the soil from your clumps when housing them. If you have done so, the roots are bound to shrivel. One commercial grower packs his roots in dry sand and they always winter well, kept in a dry cellar.

C. W.

TYLER, TEX.—Mrs. Frank Hewitt says the winter here was fine till February 14, but on that date the locality was visited by a small cyclone, by which four persons were killed. Mrs. Hewitt's place, though straight in the track of the storm, suffered less damage than did some other property. However, some of her fences were blown down, part of her greenhouse roof was smashed and several panes were driven from her second-story windows. Business, she says, was good all of last year. Everything points to an immense peach crop. The peach trees are now in full bloom and the orchards look beautiful.

Pres., George S. Green, Chicago; First Vice-pres., M. H. Duryea, New York; Sec'y and Treas., O. E. Kendel, Cleveland. Twenty-sixth annual convention at Hotel Pontchartrain, Detroit, Mich., June 23 to 25, 1908.

RED WETHERSFIELD onion seed is yet scarcer than almost any other of the needful seed commodities.

ARNOLD RINGIER, secretary of the W. W. Barnard Co., Chicago, is making his annual trip to the Pacific coast.

THE Country Gentleman for March 5 contained an excellent portrait and sketch of the career of W. Atlee Burpee, Philadelphia.

ALL the popular varieties of lettuce seed are scarce. This will give a chance to swing over to some of the old-time sorts that for all practical purposes are just as good as the newer favorites.

VISITED CHICAGO: Chas. P. Braslan, of Braslan Seed Growers Co., San Jose, Cal.; Lewis S. Jefferson, of the National Seed Co., Louisville, Ky.; A. J. Pieters, of A. J. Pieters Seed Co., Hollister, Cal.

THE L. L. Olds Seed Co., Clinton, Wis., will in a few days be in a position to say just how scarce seeds really are this season. With their stock a total loss through fire March 5, and the mail trade just gathering volume, they face the necessity of buying a complete stock of field and garden seeds, and doing it quickly.

THE onion set planters in the vicinity of Chicago claim to be fairly well provided with seed. In some cases, though, there is a determination to sow the Red Globe in place of the Wethersfield. This will be a bad thing for the grower who does it, as the Globe seed will not make an acceptable onion set, and the product of it will cause lots of trouble after harvest.

THE onion set problem is now agitating the minds of those who have them and those who have them not. No change in the situation worth mentioning can be noted, however. Now and then a car shows up at a point where it was supposed that everything had been cleaned up. This makes some of the bearish fellows feel good for the time being, but it does not affect the market. There are yet six weeks to go before the demand will be over and the posted dealers say still, as they have been saying right along, that the supply will give out before the demand ceases.

THE Yokohama Nursery Co., New York, reports a great interest being taken in Formosa longiflorum bulbs as a result of the success which is attending the flowering of last year's importation. This year the crop of these bulbs will be large enough to cut quite a figure in the market.

OLDS COMPANY BURNED OUT.

Fire totally destroyed the warehouse, office and stock of the L. L. Olds Seed Co., Clinton, Wis., March 5, causing a loss of $50,000, which is partially covered by insurance.

The fire started in the women's cloak-room on the second floor, just after the work for the day had ended and the employees had gone home. Despite the efforts of the fire department and volunteers, it spread so quickly to the entire structure that it was impossible to save the building or contents. The fire started in the east end of the building and, fanned by a strong east wind, was a seething mass of flames by the time the first alarm was sounded.

The L. L. Olds Co. is one of the largest seed concerns in the state. Its plant is one of the most complete, and it had a large stock of garden and field seeds, as well as some 16,000 bushels of potatoes, all of which are a total loss. Sixty hands were employed. Some thirty of these were women, in whose cloak-room the flames started.

The building was a three-story frame structure, with a deep basement. Temporary offices were opened next morning, and as soon as material can be obtained the plant will be rebuilt. L. L. Olds, president of the company, said that as soon as the safe could be dug out of the ruins they would be ready for business again, and hope to fill all orders with but little delay.

COMMISSION SEEDS.

During the spring of 1907 there were purchased in the states of Maine, Vermont, Massachusetts, Kentucky, Wisconsin, North Dakota, Kansas, and Colorado 2,778 packets of so-called "commission" vegetable seeds. These were put up by twenty-seven seedsmen and included seeds of twenty-six kinds of vegetables. The U. S. Department of Agriculture published, March 7, a bulletin in which it shows the average germination of each kind of seed sold by each of these seed-packeting houses, as well as the average germination of each kind from all the houses, the average germination of all the kinds from each house, and the average germination of all the samples.

The authors, Edgar Brown and W. L. Goss, say:

ets put up by one seedsman, the average germination was only 37.3 per cent, and of 241 packets put up by another the average germination was 44.3 per cent. In many cases wide differences in germination were found between different packets from the same seedsman.

"It is evident that some seedsmen are not ignorant of the quality of the seed they are selling, for in some cases the packets bear private distinguishing marks.

"In all cases the average germination of the commission seeds tested was lower than that of those sent out in the congressional seed distribution, varying from 4.5 per cent for lima beans to 56.2 per cent for parsnips.

"That many firms are selling vegetable seeds not only of a low average quality but often entirely worthless makes it evident that some sort of protection should be afforded the purchaser by a guaranty of quality given by the seedsman."

Following the tables, which will interest every seedsman and which will no doubt be heard from in the fight against the government free seeds, the following summary is presented:

"Commission seeds are largely used in planting kitchen gardens, and should be of good quality.

"The quality of such seeds is poor, the average germination of 2,778 packets of 26 kinds from 27 seed-packeting houses being only 62.2 per cent.

"The average germination of seeds from one firm was only 37.3 per cent, and from another 44.3 per cent.

"The variation in germination of different packets of the same kind of seed from the same firm was in several cases more than 90 per cent.

"By 21 of the 27 seedsmen whose seed was tested, 200 lots of seed were put up which germinated 10 per cent or less.

"By 13 packeting houses 62 lots of seed were put up which entirely failed to germinate.

"The average germination of the commission seeds tested was 25.7 per cent lower than that of those sent out in the congressional seed distribution during the past six years.

"The purchaser should receive some sort of guaranty as to the quality of the seeds he is buying."

"In the case of new species of plants, the first published botanical name takes precedence, but this publication must be technical and made in a recognized botanical or horticultural periodical or work, and not in a trade catalogue.

of such registration and attendant expenses. It is recommended that either said joint committee, or a special committee, be made a standing committee to consider all questions in dispute as to the naming of varieties, and if impossible to adjust same amicably between the disputants, to submit reports to the board of directors of both organizations.

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to each member of the Wholesale Seedsmen's League, and that a sufficient number of copies be sent to the secretary of the American Seed Trade Association for mailing to each member thereof.

"Such distribution of copies of these resolutions to be accompanied by an explanation from the secretary that we seek the coöperation of all honorable houses, in the interests of all, in an earnest endeavor to fix firmly the usages of the American seed trade upon the highest plane of business ethics."

REAPPRAISEMENT.

The following was the only reappraisal affecting seeds announced at New York March 7:

RADISH SEEDS.—From Sluis & Groot, Enkhuizen, exported January 29, 1908; entered at Springfield, Mass. File No. 48122. Invoice No. 233. Findings of Sharretts, G. A.: Radish, Round Deep Scarlet; entered at 44s, advanced to 60s per cwt. Ditto, Scarlet White Tipped; entered at 43s 9d, advanced to 60s per cwt. (for forcing). Value of seed not for forcing, 50s per cwt. Radish, Long White Strasburg; entered at 45s per cwt. No advance. Add bags.

STATE OF BUSINESS.

Business as a whole in all lines of the seed trade ought to be better than it is. The catalogue houses are claiming to be ahead of last year on orders, but this means little; the season has a lot to do with it. In general it is admitted that it is harder to get future business than it has been at this time of the year for some seasons. This, of course, may only mean that the general merchants are more cautious and that later on things will come with more of a rush. At all points the local competition has been keener than for some years and many of the consumers who buy in fairly good sized quantities are holding off in hope of getting lower prices by working the price of one dealer against another. It is generally conceded that the planter must have the seed, but it is unfortunate that seed prices in many cases are so

Success Rewarded by Success — the Unprecedented

sale of High-Class Aster seed more fully demonstrates the fact that cut flower growers of the better classes, as well as the retail florists from all parts of the United States and Canada, also Europe, are open to conviction that the trade demands a higher and better grade and quality of Asters than has heretofore been produced; consequently our improved Chrysanthemum type of Aster Lady Roosevelt seed is in wonderful demand, and not only the seed, but also the cut flower product from this unsurpassed improved variety of Aster, as same are being contracted for already for next September delivery by retail florists from several large cities of various parts of the United States, viz: New York, Pittsburg, New Orleans, Denver, etc., at $1.00 per dozen, net. As we are able to produce this superior Aster Lady Roosevelt by our special improved Scientific Intense Culture Methods with bloom stems 36 inches or more in length, enables us to ship the cut flower product to any city in the United States east of Denver without deterioration, as with the large, long, stiff, wiry stems they absorb a large quantity of water before shipping, which preserves them in transit, and also two or three weeks after their arrival at their destination.

Marvelous as it may seem, we are expecting this season to improve upon our last season's accomplishments by growing our Aster plants 6 feet tall, whereas last season they were only 4½ and 5 feet in height, thereby producing bloom stems 36 to 48 in. in length with flowers 4½ to 5½ in. in diameter, thus enabling us to realize net $4000 or more from the ¼ acre that we intend to grow for the cut flower trade. These will be marketed in at least 40 and possibly 60 different cities in the United States, from Boston, Mass., to Denver, inclusive. This is our proposed plan for creating a demand and sale for our unparalleled Chrysanthemum type of Aster Lady Roosevelt, for those who may in the near future become producers of this special Aster from the seed they are now purchasing from us. For still further desired information send for our illustrated folder—which also contains other very interesting information relative to other April crops we are engaged in the culture of.

PACIFIC COAST.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Violets in the Open.

The Signal Hill Floral Co. has gardens at Long Beach and the method of growing is of interest not only to florists on the coast, but especially so to trade visitors from the east. For instance, there is a field of sixteen acres of violets, one corner of which is shown in the accompanying illustration. Through the latter part of January and February the weekly pick from this field was above 1,200 dozen bunches, each bunch containing from eighty to 100 flowers. The gentleman of ample proportions who occupies the center of the stage in the illustration will be recognized by a large number of those in the trade, for the photographer caught Daniel MacRorie, of South Orange, N. J., who is making a trip west.

Street Venders.

The opposition to street flower sellers has once more met with defeat and in the discussion things have been said and done which have not added to the friendly relations which it is important to maintain in any trade. One of the unfortunate things was the charge by a leading newspaper that the effort to drive the venders off the street was with the purpose on the part of the store florists to establish a monopoly and raise prices. The license committee of the city council decided February 28 not to interfere with the present licensing system.

was a year ago. This has not been so noticeable with the wholesalers' receipts as with the retail men. There has been such a shortage of flowers that the growers have had no trouble to dispose of them, and at good returns, while the store men have had to keep up the usual show and many of the high priced flowers have found their way into the ash barrel. Funeral work, however, has been the bright spot on the calendar, and were it not for this there would be even less on the right side of the ledger.

Roses are much more plentiful than they have been at any time this year, and from present appearances there will be plenty to cut for some time to come. Carnations, with the exception of some fancy stock, are in good supply again and we may look for a lowering of prices in a few days. Valley has been in better demand during the last two weeks than at any time since Christmas. This is probably due to the fact that white varieties of narcissi are almost out of season and there are no other spring bulbs of that nature in evidence as yet.

My Champion Strain of Ruffled Giants is another very superior strain, finely ruffled, of enormous size, in an endless variety of color and markings. Tr. pkt., 35c; 1000 seeds, 75c; oz., $25.00.
I have only one grade of the two strains of Petunia Seed listed above, and that is the best.

Daffodils are scarcer and sell well. They cost the stores from $1 to $2 per hundred. Violets are still in their prime and are by far the most popular flower now on sale. Some Dutch hyacinths and yellow tulips are seen, but they are not in special demand. Smilax is scarce, but all kinds of wild green stuff are being brought into town in large quantities and find a ready market. The wild adiantum has proven to be a godsend to the retailers, who were at their wits' end in efforts to get sufficient maidenhair or asparagus to mix with cut flowers.

Over in Oakland the retailers are also complaining of the season's dullness and everyone has apparently made up his mind that there will be but little stirring before Easter.

Various Notes.

A. Ringier, representing W. W. Barnard Co., Chicago, is in town on his annual visit.

Thos. A. Cox, late president of the Cox Seed Co., is now a resident of Ross Station.

S. W. Marshall, of Fresno, is in town on a few days' visit.

The mother of Luther Burbank celebrated her ninety-fourth birthday at the home of her son during the present week.

The Japanese growers are forcing quantities of longiflorums for Easter and from present indications there will be plenty of that sort of material on hand.

George S. Lathrop has returned from a two weeks' trip to Los Angeles and San Diego.

EARLY SWEET PEAS.

It pays well if you have good sweet peas to offer, say two weeks before your customers begin to cut from their own plants in the garden. Flowers of shades such as shell or rose pink, soft lavender or white can be used for many purposes and always find buyers at good prices. The flowers of sweet peas cut about the end of May or early June from outdoors are larger and the stems longer than the plants will produce in July and August, for the sweet pea, or Lathyrus odoratus, loves cool soil and not too high temperature to do well and in that respect does not differ from the garden pea.

To have early outdoor sweet peas, sow from five to seven seeds to a 4-inch pot about March 15. Do not expose to a night temperature of over 50 degrees. The little plants will need support by the middle of April. We use one 12-inch stake for each pot, and after they are tied up, a few days in a coldframe will harden them off sufficiently to be planted out. It is not advisable to divide the plants for this purpose. Have support consisting of 4-foot chicken wire in place before planting, allowing about eight inches between the plants. Do not worry if the tops of the plants should get blighted by an unexpected frost. We had this happen with about 2,000 plants last season and were about to pull them up, when it was discovered that the plants were making fresh shoots from below, and while we had plants elsewhere, grown from seed sown in the open ground, which were about four inches high, the young growth of the frozen plants produced fine flowers fully nineteen days ahead of the others, and kept on for four weeks with good long stems. After this time the plants from the outdoor-sown seed were at their best, and while it was not at all a paying proposition with the flowers we cut in July and

EFFECT OF FOGS.

Chrysanthemum growers along the Atlantic seaboard often complain of the damping off of flowers as a result of the autumnal fogs, but that they do not suffer alone is shown by a writer in La Tribune Horticole, who says the dense fogs that have recently prevailed in Belgium have done an immense amount of damage to plants under glass. "Brussels has suffered badly, and the buds of cattleya, lœlia, dendrobium and other orchids have shriveled without opening; while the forced lilacs shed their blossoms in showers while being cut for the market."

HOTHOUSE TOMATOES.

The last planting of tomatoes for this season should be in by this time, as the time required for tomatoes to come to bearing, after being planted in the beds or benches, is about three months. Seed planted now will, however, make nice pot plants for planting out much more quickly than they would a month ago. It is not advisable to plant seed intended for forcing later than March 1.

There are few plants more susceptible to water than the tomato. To hold them back and make a short, sturdy growth, they should be held a little dry, care being taken not to allow the foliage to wither and burn. They can be held in this way for a long time without injury, and, on the other hand, if well watered they will grow surprisingly fast, but are inclined to be too tall and soft if crowded too fast. If the plants are a little behind, it is a good plan to keep them warm and well watered for a while and then harden them up by holding back on the water a little until planting time.

When the plants are put into the beds they should be given a thorough watering, much depending on how dry the soil in the benches is at the time and how good the drainage is. After this is completed, then comes the most important stage of the game. If they are held just right, not too wet or too dry, they will start to bloom very soon, and close to the ground, but if overwatered they will make a handsome growth of stalk and foliage, with but few or no blooms. It is not the time it takes them to get to the top of the string, but the quantity of good, healthy blooms and fruit, that should concern the grower most. In watering, the beds should be watered thoroughly and then left alone until they really need water again. Water will not hurt the foliage in bright weather, but it is better not to wet the plants above the soil in winter weather or when in bloom.

The most popular method with American growers is the single stem culture, but some growers prefer two or three stalks to the plant in fall and winter crops. When grown to single stems, the plants are placed in rows about three feet apart, or two rows to the bench, and one foot apart in the row. A wire is run along the bench and one overhead.

To these wires perpendicular strings are tied, in the same way as in the training of smilax or Asparagus plumosus in cut flower establishments. The twine best adapted for tying tomatoes in this manner is four-ply jute. The fruit comes on the main stalk and all branches should be removed just as soon as long enough to get a hold of. When the plants get to growing nicely the foliage will become entirely too thick. Some of the leaves will have to be removed and all the remainder clipped, removing about one-half or one-third of the leaf. This might seem to the amateur grower to be severe treatment, but it will not hurt the plants and will help to maintain the balance of root and foliage growth, the root growth being restricted by the close planting.

When the plants begin to bloom they require close attention, to see that all blooms are fertilized and set fruit. Some growers still follow the old method of hand pollinating with a spoon and a tiny brush, by holding the spoon under the blooms and touching them with the brush, which is dipped frequently into the pollen which falls into the spoon. I have never practiced this method, having always had good success by going down the rows every bright, warm day about noon, when the house is driest, warmest and best ventilated, and tapping the stalks with a newspaper rolled up into a solid roll, making a light, soft paddle that will not injure the fruit. The jar shakes the pollen loose and some of it falls onto the pistils of the blooms.

Some varieties seem to set more easily than others. I have often wondered if tomatoes were not like strawberries, some varieties having both sexes in the same bloom and some in different blooms. Perhaps some botanist can tell us. The variety Winter Beauty seems to set fruit on every bloom, whether fertilized or not, and very seldom bears a crooked or one-sided fruit, such as comes on some other varieties when only one side of the pistil is touched with the brush of pollen. Many failures in tomato growing are due to the blooms not being fertilized and careful attention should be given to the matter. In case any blooms are seen to dry up and fall off, do not rest until satisfied you have put a stop to it.

There are many good forcing varieties. The following are a few of the best: Comet, Sunrise, Winter Beauty, Stirling Castle, Frogmore's Selected, Lorillard's Forcing and Sutton's Best of All.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYMEN.

Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Vice-Pres., C. M. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The 33d annual convention will be held at Milwaukee, June, 1908.

THE nurserymen of the southwest, where the fruit trees are now in bloom, say that the season has been an excellent one.

A LARGE number of florists are this spring planting nurseries of ornamental stock. One great advantage the florist sees in the nursery business is the amount of fall planting that can be done.

THE Northwest Nursery Co., Valley City, N. D., has been incorporated with $50,000 authorized capital stock. The incorporators are Ernest C. Hilborn and E. A. Pray, of Valley City, and P. A. Pickett, of Leal, N. D.

It is now generally known by the public that it is not practicable to rely upon an orchard of seedling trees, as such trees seldom produce fruit of equal quality to that of the seed planted, however choice and carefully selected. W. F. Heikes says that even in the case of citrus fruits, the trees of which were formerly grown almost entirely from seed, there was such a variation in size, shape and quality of the fruit that in later orchard plantings seedlings have no longer been in use, but the desired varieties are propagated by either budding or grafting.

THE Southeastern Nursery Co. has been incorporated at Beaumont, Tex., with a capital stock of $6,000. The incorporators are E. McMickin, J. W., T. A. and A. S. Sporlock.

THE nurserymen evidently have been studying the printers' art during the last few months, and the relation of good printing to the science of getting business by mail, for the spring catalogues are nearly all better written, better illustrated and better printed than ever before.

WILLIAM A. TAYLOR, of the United States Department of Agriculture, says: "The pecan industry is now where it needs most careful investigation to determine the adaptability of the pecan to different soils, and especially the adaptability of particular varieties to climatic and soil conditions. We are just putting a young man to work on that subject, having secured C. A. Reed, recently of the Maryland and West Virthe general requirements far better than any other variety of peach that has been sufficiently tested in a commercial way, but we should consider it a great acquisition to our present list of varieties if we could have peaches of like merit ripening both earlier and later. ## DAYTON, OHIO.

State of Trade.

Business in general has been somewhat slow, although some of our florists speak favorably of it. Funeral orders have been quite numerous, as some of our most prominent citizens have died. There is a good demand for roses, but they are still scarce. Carnations can be had in any quantity. Calla lilies seem to move nicely, but there is not an overabundance of them. Easter lilies, daffodils, hyacinths and bulbous stock in general move slowly. Azaleas do not bring the price they ought to, but they are used quite extensively as presents. The weather has been favorable to the grower, as the days are bright and the nights temperate.

Various Notes.

The Miami Floral Co., which is chiefly conducted on a wholesale basis, reports that in the month of February it has done a much better business than that of February, 1907. It is cutting some fine carnations, and its propagation on same has been most encouraging this season.

The Dayton Floral Co., which is situated along the Miami river, has, for the last two weeks, experienced considerable trouble with water getting into the boiler-room, and it has been necessary, therefore, to call on the fire department to pump them out.

The Dayton Florists' Club held the annual election of officers March 2 at the store of Mrs. Elizabeth Young, on East Fifth street. The following is the result of the election: President, H. H. Ritter; vice-president, Mrs. E. Young; treasurer, George Bartholomew; secretary, Horace Frank. Mr. Frank has been secretary of the club ever since its organization, which took place in March, 1906. After the election of officers, the meeting was turned over to a general discussion of business topics and a social time was enjoyed.

The executive committee of the Dayton Florists' Club met at the store of H. H. Ritter, in the Algonquin Hotel building, on March 7.

Crocuses are in bloom on our Dayton lawns.

Mrs. John Boehner, who has been critically ill with the grip, is reported to be on the road to recovery.

Mr. Gowdy, of Henry A. Dreer, Philadelphia, was one of our last week's visitors.

R. A. B.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND. — In the show window of McDonald & Steele's West Main street store there has lately been a display of Aristocrat and White Perfection carnations of such excellent quality as to do great credit to the firm's grower, A. S. Petit. The blooms measure from four to four and a half inches.

The garden committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society recently visited the greenhouses of H. A. Jahn, of New Bedford, to see his carnations. A white seedling which is largely planted and which has been shown at Boston and other shows, was looking fine. It is the most wonderfully prolific white the committee had seen. The flower is large, full and the stem ideal.—Boston News-letter in Nov. 28, 1907, issue of THE FLORISTS' REVIEW.

ITHACA, N. Y.

Carnations at Cornell.

The horticultural department of Cornell University held its fourth annual carnation exhibition March 4 to 6. The exhibit was in charge of the students in floriculture, who managed, staged, and judged the blooms. The exhibit was purely for educational purposes and no prizes were offered. However, many growers took advantage of the opportunity to place their stock before a class of interested students.

The exhibition was well advertised about the city and many visitors were present during the three days. After the exhibition the blooms were put to good use by the students, in packing demonstrations, design making, etc. At the weekly meeting of the Horticultural Club (Lazy Club) carnations were the subject of discussion. An interesting talk on carnation breeding was given by Dr. Weber, and the varieties, from a commercial point of view, were discussed by L. D. Batchelor.

Among the exhibitors were C. W. Ward, whose two winners at the Washington show, Mrs. C. W. Ward and Alma Ward, caused a great deal of comment and expressions of admiration from the visitors. His President and Beacon also showed excellent growing.

R. Witterstaetter, of Cincinnati, exhibited Afterglow, which showed up well. The new scarlet variety, Andrew Carnegie, was exhibited by the Chicago Carnation Co. The blooms made a fine showing and were much admired by the visitors.

F. R. Pierson Co., Tarrytown, sent a very creditable exhibit of Variegated Lawson, Enchantress, Winsor, Beacon, and Red Lawson.

The horticultural department of New Hampshire College exhibited an interesting lot of seedlings with their pedigrees attached. Many of these give promise of becoming good commercial varieties. They made a creditable showing for the plant breeding department of that institution.

John E. Haines, Bethlehem, Pa., exhibited a fine lot of blooms. Among them were Pink Imperial and Variegated Imperial, which showed a remarkable stem and very durable bloom. His bright scarlet variety, John E. Haines, White Perfection and light pink seedling No. 102, made an especially creditable showing.

Paul Thomson, of West Hartford, Conn., exhibited a yellow variety, Neptune, which attracted a great deal of attention as being the only yellow variety exhibited.

Jas. E. Cockcroft, Northport, L. I., exhibited Harvard in excellent form.

Frank H. Kimberly, New Haven, Conn., staged Enchantress and White Enchantress, also Marie Louise violets.

Among the varieties exhibited by the horticultural department of Cornell were Harlowarden and Mrs. Lawson.

CARNATION CUTTINGS

We are in unusually good position to supply exceptionally well-rooted, healthy stock. We have such a large quantity of flowering plants that we propagate only from heel cuttings from flowering shoots. Our cuttings are rooted in light, sunny, airy houses, and we are sure will satisfy the most critical buyer.

A prominent carnation grower writes: "You seem to be the only firm in the business that knows how to pack stock and have it reach the buyer in good condition, and I have always found your cuttings cheaper than the same varieties from others at much lower figures."

While our prices may not always be the cheapest, we certainly can give, quality considered, as good value as, if not better than, is obtainable anywhere.

We offer also BEACON and RED CHIEF, from sand, $6.00 per 100; $50.00 per 1000. From soil, $7.50 per 100; $60.00 per 1000. Also VICTORY, MELODY, WHITE PERFECTION, from sand, $4.00 per 100; $35.00 per 1000. From soil, $6.00 per 100; $45.00 per 1000. VARIEGATED LAWSON, WHITE LAWSON and RED LAWSON, from sand, $3.00 per 100; $25.00 per 1000. From soil, $4.00 per 100; $35.00 per 1000. We can also supply WINONA and AFTERGLOW, $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

Buyers will find transplanted stock offered from soil well worth the difference in price.

It is a fact beyond dispute, that are the best and most profitable commercial varieties in sight today. From all sections of the country orders have been coming thick and fast, so much so that for a time it seemed that we could not possibly supply the demand. Our fears, however, proved groundless.

WHITE ENCHANTRESS (PURE SPORT)
BEACON, WINSOR and
ROSE-PINK ENCHANTRESS

With a stock unexcelled anywhere, in the land and a propagator second to none, we were able to fill all orders to date.

We have now to offer the following: (Please note quantities and approximate dates of delivery.)

WINSOR, which we introduced last year, has proved to be the finest novelty introduced in years. We think it is the most profitable variety grown today, considering its fine color, splendid keeping qualities, and productiveness. When properly grown, it leaves little to be desired, and almost everyone succeeds with it.

WHITE ENCHANTRESS, the best all-carnation on account of its large size, long stem, earliness, and productiveness. Our White Enchantress, exhibited at the Carnation Convention at Washington, was the only White Enchantress exhibited that received an award.

Strong rooted cuttings, now ready for delivery, from sand,

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

A street salesman was arrested and taken before the court:

Judge: Your name?
Faker: Levinski.
Judge: Where were you born?
Faker: Russia.
Judge: Your business?
Faker: Rotten!

That about covers it. With a deluge of everything that blooms coming in, Lenten business has not been so slow for several years, but it seems as if every one is observing the season this year. I would be ashamed to mention some of the prices at which I have seen strictly first-class carnations, violets, tulips and lilies sold; it would almost disgrace the trade; but even that does not move all the stock coming in.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club met March 3, with a good attendance and a fine show of plants. Those who exhibited were: H. L. Blind & Bros., tulips and azaleas; Herman Hein, azaleas; John Bader, azaleas, palms and tulips; R. H. Boggs, gardener to Mr. Madsen, Cineraria stellata in 6-inch pots, three feet across, the finest ever shown in this city; James Fraser, H. C. Frick's gardener, Primula obconica; Allegheny park, cinerarias; Schenley park, samples of everything in the bulb line. The whole collection of plants was fine and a credit to the men who grew them. The enthusiasm created by the exhibition was well deserved, and the discussion of the various good points, and how to obtain them, held the boys until a later hour than usual.

The judges, P. S. Randolph and John Walker, recommended the following: Mr. Boggs, special mention for azalea; Mr. Hein, azalea, first prize; H. L. Blind & Bros., azalea, second prize, and first for tulips; Mr. Hein, for rambler roses, first; Mr. Fraser, special mention for primula.

Various Notes.

E. C. Ludwig and family have returned from California, feeling much better for their trip and enthusiastic over the country which they have been visiting.

Hoo-Hoo.

I HAVE only been a subscriber to the REVIEW for about four months, but I estimate it has saved me at least $25 in cash, paid out for stock, and I consider it the best publication I receive.

IT MAY INTEREST YOU TO KNOW THAT OUR NEW CARNATION

MAY

is outselling Enchantress in this market. It sells for the same price over the retail counter, and our store-men call for it in preference. Isn't that enough evidence of its selling qualities? For the grower it is the most profitable light pink that has ever come to our notice. It is free and early, and every bloom is on a good stem and salable. We are shipping fine cuttings now and shall be pleased to serve you.

MILWAUKEE.

The Florists' Club gave a dancing party on the evening of February 26, which was a decided success. About 150 in the trade were present.

The regular meeting of the club was held the following evening, which was observed as carnation night, and there was a large exhibit of these blooms from local and outside growers, as well as exhibits in other lines.

E. G. Hill showed a nice vase of the new rose, Rhea Reid. Poehlmann Bros. showed a splendid vase of Potter Palmer. Albert Lies and the C. C. Pollworth Co. exhibited choice Maids, Brides, Chatenay and Richmonds.

Alex Klokner, of Wauwatosa, Wis., showed some fine snapdragons, stocks and mignonette. Robt. Zepnick showed several bunches of choice pansies. F. P. Dilger showed a large variety of bulb stock, which was well grown. F. Dorner & Sons Co. had a fine vase of its new carnation, Winona, and E. G. Hill also had a fine lot of Afterglow.

The Chicago Carnation Co. showed Carnegie, White Enchantress and Aristocrat, all of which were exceptionally well done. Nic Zweifel also had some fine White Perfection, Pink Enchantress, Winsor and Victory. Every one of these varieties was first-class. August Manke showed a fine vase of Enchantress and Aristocrat. Fritz Bahr, of Evanston, sent up Lucile, which attracted considerable attention for its size and stem.

The C. C. Pollworth Co. also displayed a fine lot of well grown lily of the valley and carnations in several varieties. Gustave Pohl, Wm. Edlefsen, Heitman & Baerman, Wm. Miller, M. P. Vallier and John Howard also exhibited carnations in several varieties.

The exhibit was in every way a success and there was a large attendance at the meeting.

Alex Klokner had a large decoration last week on account of the opening of the new palm garden. C. C.

WASHINGTON.

State of Trade.

We are having fine spring weather, not too much business and plenty of cut stock of good quality, also plants in pots. We should like to see the demand a little more active.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club had a most interesting and well attended meeting last week. It was a double-header, the annual election of officers and rose night.

President P. Bisset made an address, in which he reported on the club's activities during his two years in office. "Activities" is just the right word, for it has been two busy years. Officers were elected as follows: President, F. H. Kramer; vice-president, John Robinson; secretary, Chas. McCauley; treasurer, Wm. F. Gude; directors, P. Bisset, Chas. McCauley, Geo. Shaffer, Wm. F. Gude, John Robinson; awards committee, Chas. McCauley, Geo. Fields, J. Robinson, J. W. Freeman, Geo. Cooke.

The annual banquet will take place April 7.

F. H. Kramer staged a fine lot of his Queen Beatrice rose. Peter Bisset showed some of his seedlings. One he had labeled G. B. has up to the present scored eighty-seven points. Wm. P. Craig showed a fine lot of Mrs. Jardine rose. Robert Ross Jones, representing the Morehead steam trap, gave an interesting talk on steam heating. He also showed a new electric light which interested all present.

The chairman of the bowlers announced that the ladies have arranged to bowl Thursday afternoon of each week.

E. J. Fancourt was in town with William Craig, of Philadelphia, this week.

MANCHESTER, MASS.

The North Shore Horticultural Society held its regular meeting March 6, President William Till in the chair. The speaker of the evening was Robert Cameron, of Harvard Botanic Garden, Cambridge. The subject was "Annuals." Mr. Cameron treated the subject in an able and thorough manner, his lecture being so complete as to leave no chance for questions or discussion. A vote of thanks was extended for the lecture.

James Salter was awarded a certificate of merit for a vase of white antirrhinum.

TOLEDO, OHIO.

Funeral work came to the rescue of local florists last week and helped make the business of that period better than it has been for months. Two prominent citizens passed away, and each funeral called for an exceptionally large number of floral offerings. George Heint received a large share of the work, and Mr. Heint's assistants worked until midnight each night. The Schoen Floral Co. enjoyed a good business in its new store. The Wisner Floral Co. did a better business than for some time, and, in fact, every local florist reports an increase of trade.

One of the largest orders for one occasion in months was given by the King Furniture Co., which opened its new store March 7. A number of large floral pieces, horseshoes, four-leaf clovers and other designs, were made on the order of those interested in the firm, and decorated the windows. The Peck, Wisner and Heint companies furnished the flowers and designs.

LANCASTER, N. Y.

W. J. Palmer & Son are soon to add three new greenhouses to their plant here. Superintendent Barnard Myers was recently in Chicago getting estimates for the framework, which will take 35,000 feet of glass, which was purchased some time ago. The plant has now 300,000 feet of glass, heated by seven boilers, which consume about 1,600 tons of coal per year. The industry is the main one in Lancaster. The payroll for the local greenhouse and the Palmer stores in Buffalo is about $500 per week. The firm will engage in wholesale business after next year, as well as retail.

NEW LONDON, WIS.

E. H. Olson has bought sixty acres of land just south of the city limits, upon the Hortonville road, including a fine residence and buildings, of M. S. Gorman, and will as soon as possible transfer his business to that site. He will first erect three new greenhouses of about the size of the two he now has in the city. When these are completed the stock will be transferred from the old plant to the new, and then the two old houses will be moved out, giving him a total of five on the new site. In addition to his greenhouse business, Mr. Olson proposes to branch out into ornamental nursery stock, and will this year lay out ten acres for the purpose. Gladiolus bulbs will receive some of his attention, the land being especially suited for growing them for the trade.

Greenhouse Heating.

THE Morehead Mfg. Co., Detroit, has found so large a demand in Canada for its automatic steam trap that it has opened a branch factory for the manufacture of the trap at Chatham, Ont. The Morehead trap is designed primarily for greenhouse work, and has done much for greenhouse owners who previously could not use steam because of trouble in returning the condensation to the boilers, but the trap is also used in other kinds of heating systems and the business has become a large one.

To start with, it is an absolute fact that a boiler of certain dimensions that will just heat five houses 20x100 if used with hot water, will heat only five houses of the same size if used with steam, notwithstanding any theories to the contrary.

First, it is the burning of the coal that produces the heat; this heat, no matter how applied, simply goes to make up the heat losses for the houses. The only difference between heating by hot water or steam, as far as the boiler and radiation are concerned, is that it takes more radiating surface in the heating pipes with hot water heat, because the temperature of the radiating surface is lower in case of hot water. This fact is shown by the catalogue of every firm which makes both steam and hot water boilers, particularly in the case of the American Radiator Co. They have probably made more tests of steam and hot water boilers than any other firm in the world.

MOREHEAD MFG. CO.

1043 Grand River Ave., DETROIT, MICH.

Mention The Review when you write.

For example, a boiler rated in these catalogues to take care of 1,000 square feet of glass in a greenhouse would be exactly the same size whether used for hot water or steam heat, and this applies to boilers for ranges of any size. You will find this statement borne out if you will consult practically any boiler catalogue.

It is shown in these catalogues that the same boiler in their water and steam ratings merely differs by rating it higher in the amount of heating pipes for hot water by about fifty per cent in order to take care of the additional amount of hot water surface necessary; that is, a certain boiler having a rating of 1,000 feet of steam radiation will be rated at about 1,500 feet of hot water radiation. The net result would be, the houses will be heated to the same temperature by the same boiler, no more, no less, with the same expenditure of coal, the only difference being that with steam heat there would be installed 1,000 square feet radiation, while with hot water there would be required 1,500 square feet radiation in the houses.

A properly designed boiler will heat the same building to the same temperature using steam or hot water, provided sufficient radiation is installed to allow for the lower temperature of the radiating surface in the case of hot water. That this is a point in favor of hot water seems well recognized by prominent growers and florists, as the temperature in the case of hot water reaches only about 160 to 180 degrees and thus does not burn the air or dry up the hydroscopic moisture of the plants, and, on account of the more piping being used, gives a more even distribution.

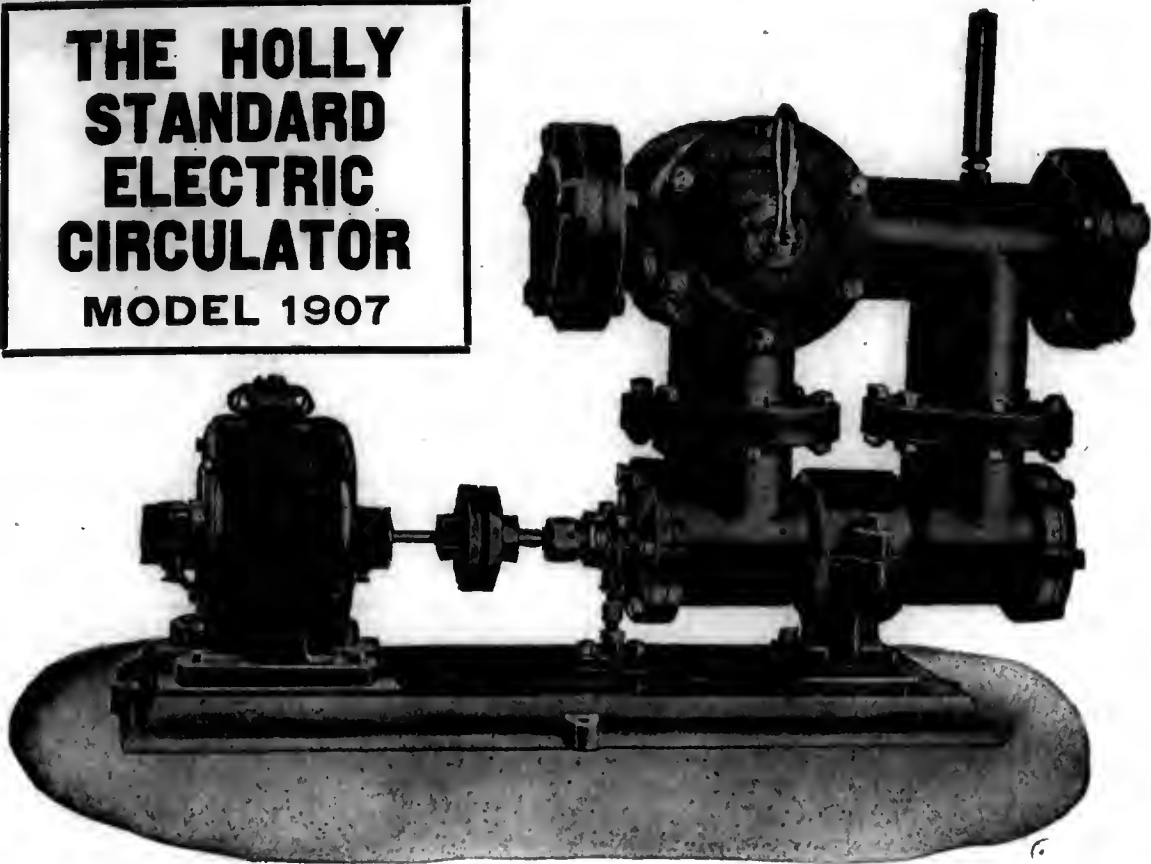

You cannot get something for nothing out of boilers any more than any other branch of human endeavor.

KROESCHELL BROS. CO.

MORE ABOUT EXPANSION TANKS

Regarding the overflowing of expansion tanks in hot water heating, let me say that when the useless and dangerous practice of connecting the tank with the bottom of the boiler, or with the main return pipe near the boiler, is discontinued and a proper and safe connection made, the overflow of expansion tanks and its consequent dangers will cease. Whether your tank is one foot or twenty feet above the highest point in the system, make connection with the main flow pipe with not less than 1-inch pipe, at or near the highest point if practicable; if not, then at any point in the main flow pipe. And no special connection to the top of the boiler will be needed and no overflow will result. When your boiler begins to generate steam, it will readily pass out through the expansion tank instead of backing the water out, as it will when connection is made at or near the bottom of the boiler.

R. G. MILFORD.

FROM BOILER TO GRATES.

In his bulletin on "How to Burn Illinois Coal Without Smoke," L. P. Breckenridge says:

"Having in mind the horizontal fire tube boiler, the distance from the bottom of the boiler to the grates should be from thirty to thirty-four inches. At this distance the flame from Illinois coal will sweep along the bottom of the boiler and much smoke will result. Still it must be borne in mind that a large part of the heat to be obtained from the burning of the fixed carbon part of these coals is transferred to the shell in the form of radiant heat and for this purpose the grate should be near the boiler. While it is necessary, in preventing smoke, that the flame be kept from the cooling surfaces of boilers, this cannot be accomplished by simply lowering the grates under a horizontal fire tube boiler, as the writer has unfortunately been incorrectly quoted as having stated. For boilers of this type some form of furnace extending partly or entirely in front of the boilers and either hand fired or fed by stokers of the Murphy type would undoubtedly furnish a satisfactory solution to the smoke problem. But the smoke problem is not usually satisfactorily solved with Illinois coals and the horizontal fire tube boiler. The small unit hardly warrants an automatic stoker. Desire for a cheap plant prevents any special form of furnace and so it is that this kind of a setting frequently proves to be a troublesome smoker."

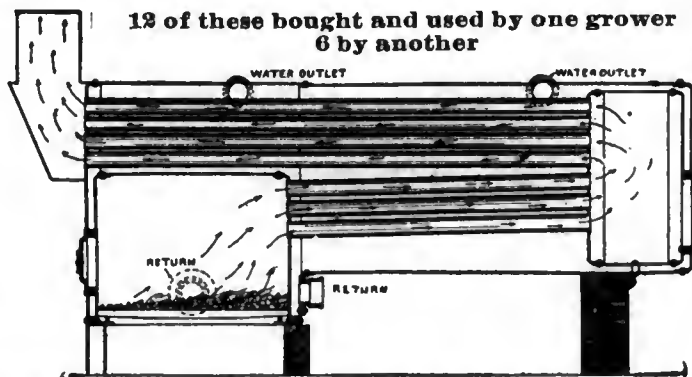

LARGE leaks, a foot long or more, are not possible by merely sowing the seed and trimming out the plants. To get large, whitened leaks it is necessary to cultivate them much the same way as is practiced with celery. The seed may be sown outdoors in the ordinary manner, and then, when the plants are about four inches high, they may be dibbled into trenches, covering the base of the leaks with soil as growth progresses through the summer. If exhibition specimens are desired, heavy feeding can be safely resorted to.

State Association Meets.

At the regular meeting of the State Florists' Association, held March 3 at the state house, a good attendance was on hand. President Stuart was in the chair. Discussion of affairs as regards the carnation convention took most of the evening and it is generally conceded that the 1909 meeting will long live in the memory of those who are lucky enough to attend it. E. G. Hill and Fred Dorner, Jr., were present and gave much useful advice. Some good vases of flowers were shown and helped to make the meeting more interesting. A vase of Mrs. Potter Palmer rose, sent by Poehlmann Bros. Co., Chicago, received honorable mention. A vase of pink seedling carnations and also a fine plant of orchid-flowered cyclamen shown by H. W. Riegan received special mention, as did R. Witterstaetter for a vase of Afterglow. A white carnation shown by Baur & Smith scored eighty-five points. This firm also had a vase of May and a vase of seedling carnations that attracted much attention. Dorner & Sons Co. showed Winona, a pleasing pink in color and of good form and stem. S.

DAVENPORT, IA.

The Tri-City Florists' Association held its annual meeting March 5, at the residence and greenhouses of Harry Bills, a good attendance being a feature of the meeting. Officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: President, William Knees, Moline; vice-president for Davenport, Harry Bills; vice-president for Rock Island, H. Gaethje; vice-president for Moline, Peter Baker; secretary, J. T. Temple, Davenport; financial secretary, Theodore Ewoldt; treasurer, C. O. E. Boehm; executive committee, Mr. Anderson, Moline; H. Pauli, Davenport, and H. Meyer, Rock Island.

It was decided to hold the annual banquet of the club on the evening of March 19 at the Rock Island Turner hall.

The subject up for discussion was, "What Are the Best Pot Plants for Spring Sale?" Refreshments were served by the host, Mr. Bills. The guests also went through the greenhouses, inspecting his stock, upon which they commented very favorably, finding everything in good condition.

George Klehm, of Klehm's Nursery, Arlington Heights, Ill., was a guest at the meeting.

DISPLAY CASE FOR NOVELTIES.

There is an old saying that variety is the spice of life, and certainly variety in the stock of requisites available adds much to the attractiveness and interest which attaches to the work of an up-to-date retailer. With the splendid enterprise of the leading supply dealers, it is impossible for any florist to buy everything in the novelty line which is offered during the year, but it always will pay him to carry a good stock of these articles, in proportion to the needs of his business, for by their use one often makes a sale which otherwise would be lost, and at the same time the sale of jardinières, pot covers, ferneries, vases, baskets, hampers and thousand and one other articles affords a profit nearly if not quite as great as is made on the plants and flowers which go into them.

In too many flower stores little use is made of the opportunity to display these wares attractively. A well selected stock of table fern-dishes, for instance, tastefully displayed, will inevitably make sales. You must show the people what you have to sell if you want them to buy. Do not expect customers to come in and demand your unseen wares; instead, they will patronize the man around the corner who makes a neat display of the things he has for sale.

The accompanying illustration shows one of the display cases for supplies in the exhibition rooms of the E. Wienhoeber Co., Chicago. As is well known, Richard Mansfield for some years occupied the suite of rooms above the Wienhoeber flower store and, upon the death of Mr. Mansfield, Mr. Wienhoeber was quick to see the interest which would attach to the quarters the celebrated actor had occupied. Therefore he fitted them up for the display of table decorations, cut flower arrangements and, most of all, novelties in the supply line. Invitations were issued to the public to visit the rooms and they were thronged for days. Save for the front room, where a table decoration was shown, the walls were largely occupied by display cases similar to the one illustrated. There was an immense variety of jardinières, fern-dishes, hampers, window-boxes, etc., and many a visitor reversed the usual order of things by selecting a dish, asking to have it filled with an appropriate plant, instead of buying a plant and asking that it be placed in an appropriate receptacle.

FIGHT AGAINST BILLBOARDS.

The American Civic Association is vitally interested in billboards. It is leading the campaign for their suppression where necessary, and for their regulation by communities in the interest of a better and more beautiful America. One of its chief aims at this time is to arouse the American people to the necessity for prompt and effective action against the spread and maintenance of this nuisance, which, if unchecked, will soon defeat much of the growing effort for civic orderliness and city beauty.

Richard Watson Gilder, editor of the Century Magazine, put the case strongly and aptly in a letter he wrote for the Providence meeting of this association:

"As I went yesterday to my office in this city I passed one of the most beautiful of modern buildings, a savings bank built recently of white marble in the classical style. It is a pleasure to look upon this noble and restful structure. And it is a pain and an anger to have to take in, at the same glance, an enormous liquor sign high in the air beyond and

"A similar experience accompanied my railroad trip on the same day over one of the lines between New York and Philadelphia—where now and again a loud array of advertising signs spoiled the effect of the rich, otherwise harmonious landscape.

"One of these days the people of a commercial community will appreciate the fact that, to put it commercially, beauty is a valuable asset, as well as 'a joy forever'; and then the advertisement fiend will not be allowed to go up and down the land destroying views, which means destroying values—values that belong to the entire population, and that no individual has the right to ruin."

The Civic Association exists for the coördination and direction of the forces which make for a clean and beautiful country. It regards the home as the unit of our national life and the improvement of home grounds as the first step in civic betterment, and therefore it urges that a community of enlightened homes demand the removal of the unsightly and unsanitary in its surround-above it. What is the use of building exquisite structures if any tasteless and remorseless trader can come along with his glaring, dominating appeals for your money, and utterly spoil the effect? It is as if at a symphony concert vendors of soap should be allowed to go up and down the aisles and bawl their wares.

ings. In such a community is developed the civic conscience that provides public improvements of a sane and wholesome nature, and that tends toward the preservation of great natural scenic heritages.

We cannot expect to have and maintain beautiful and truly enlightened homes if we permit them to be intruded upon by ugly and debasing signs maintained for private gain. We cannot realize the "city beautiful" if we fail to check the extension of objectionable billboards.

The American Civic Association wants the coöperation of every florist in this campaign—first, through his enrollment as a member so that it may have the support of his name and contribution, or if he is a member, then by help through enlisting friends, neighbors and newspapers. Surely there is no one more interested than the florist in the city beautiful movement, either from his love of nature or for what he has to gain in money. A beautiful city means increased sale for plants and flowers.

SALVIAS FOR BEDDING.

The beautiful display of salvia on the grounds of the St. Louis exposition a few years ago attracted the attention of all flower lovers. After seeing that display at its best, the writer, having been a grower of decorative plants and flowers for thirty years, was so impressed with the effect produced by well grown salvia, that he has experimented each year since the date mentioned and last year grew on his premises the bed illustrated in this issue of the REVIEW.

It is the practice of florists to keep over a few plants of salvia, from which they propagate their supply for the coming season. Plants thus produced are not as vigorous as those raised from seed, and the old plants are troublesome to keep over on account of mealy bug and white fly. Seed planted in pans any time during March will make the best of bedding plants and be ready to set out before the weather will permit anywhere in this state (Pennsylvania). As soon as the plants show their second leaves, they should be transplanted into flats about four inches in depth. In about two weeks transplant again, giving them more room, and then continue to transplant, always in flats, as in pots they become spindly and are always too dry.

If properly grown in flats, by the time the weather is fit to allow them to be set out, they will be eight or ten inches high and the main stem as thick as a good sized lead-pencil. They are good feeders and therefore must have good garden soil, well enriched with well-rotted manure.

After being first set out, they make little progress the first two weeks, but should be cultivated and well watered. After growth has started, cultivation every three or four days should be kept up, with profuse watering. In a month after planting they will be strong and vigorous, and, if the best results are wanted, both in height of plants, good, strong, dense foliage, and a profusion of flowers, this may certainly be obtained by vigorous feeding.

Last year my canna bed, with an 8-foot border of Salvia Bonfire, and containing about 600 salvia plants, the border being 150 feet in length, not all shown in the illustration, was the most vigorous and tallest, with the most beautiful mass of bloom I have ever seen. I am a man of more than ordinary height, and in the picture, as will be seen, the salvia plants came to my shoulders. To produce the growth I placed between the rows, as soon as the foliage shaded the ground, as much manure of the preceding winter's saving in the cow yard as could be placed on the ground without resting against the stems of the plants. I used eight large wheelbarrow loads, hoed it into the ground a little, continued the watering with garden hose, not much on the foliage, throwing the water under and keeping the ground always damp. They were in bloom from August 1 until October 10. Now, I hear growers say after reading this, "Oh! That's too much work." But remember, "There is no excellence without great labor." And you may rest assured this bed of salvia was worth to me in a business way all it cost in time and effort.

W. H. H. RIDDLE.

necessary for a time. With verbenas, dahlias, stocks and others of more robust habit, the soil can be a little coarser and stronger. Avoid the use of soil which has not been thoroughly warmed, or you will probably lose a large proportion of your crop. A light shade, either on the glass or provided by a sheet of thin cotton cloth, will be needed for a few days. This is preferable to laying sheets of paper on top of the plants, as we often see done. Watering of newly transplanted seedlings must be attended to religiously. It is work which cannot be skipped, even if a big funeral order comes in or other work is pressing. Look them over twice a day during bright weather and they are not likely to take any harm.

Dahlias.

While some growers make a point of starting their dahlia tubers even before this date, nothing special is to be gained by so doing. Of course, with new varieties, the effort is to get as many cuttings rooted as possible. These are less serviceable for shipping purposes than roots, but for home planting are fully as good as root divisions. In fact, our experience has been that they give finer flowers than the shoots from divided pieces of root. Possibly these facts may not be accepted by some dahlia specialists, but it is easy for any one to try the two methods and prove for himself which of the two is preferable.

It must be remembered that the eyes are on the crown and that, therefore, the roots should be placed in moist, gentle heat to start these before any root division can be done. For purely local trade there is no need to start the roots for a month yet, but if cuttings are to be rooted, a start should not be delayed. We like those rubbed off with a heel, as they will root in sixteen days in a bottom heat of 65 to 70 degrees. If they become too long to put in as heel cuttings, shorten to four pairs of leaves and cut directly under the lowest pair. These will take a few days longer to root than those untrimmed at the base. A top heat a few degrees lower than the bottom heat is to be preferred for dahlias.

To those who may merely be growing a certain number for themselves, the foregoing notes may be of no service, for in many cases the roots are planted outside before being started and excellent results are had from this system. Dormant tubers set out any time between May 1 and June 20 will flower well. In fact, too early planting is not to be recommended.

Rambler Roses.

Rambler roses intended for Easter should now have the buds separated so that they can be counted, and if they start to show color by April 1, they will be on time. As the pots are now full of active roots, they need a lot of water, or loss of foliage will soon ensue. Liquid manure can be given once in three or four days, discontinuing it after the flowers open. As growth is now very rapid under glass, the plants will need constant attention in spacing. Every effort should be made to have each plant as perfect as possible. This can only be done by elevating some of the finest specimens and spreading out the others. Keep the hose off the plants now, and if sulphur is kept on the steam pipes, mildew will probably not trouble you. Cold draughts, however, must be avoided. Mildew-covered plants are not

SEASONABLE

Asters.

A good sowing of asters should now be made. Stand the flats either on a shelf or a light bench. A strong heat is not necessary for successful germination; 50 to 55 degrees is better than 10 degrees higher. If sown in the higher temperature, remove the flats soon after the seedlings appear to a somewhat cooler structure, or the little plants will become drawn. In transplanting them use heavier soil than when sowing the seeds. A little well spent hotbed manure or old mushroom manure can take the place of leaf-mold. A close atmosphere is to be avoided, or many of the seedlings will damp off. Do not sow the seeds thickly, or the result will only be spindling plants instead of short, stocky ones.

If a sowing of Queen of the Earlies was made when suggested, for an early crop, a second sowing of this same excellent sort will now be timely. Other suitable kinds are Victoria, American Branching and Comet. The colors to be used must depend on the particular calls of the grower. As a rule, white, rose, lavender and pink sell the best and are most useful in floral work. In asters, as in all flowers, buy only the best seed. It will be found the cheapest in the end.

Transplanting Seedlings.

From the early sowings quite a few of the little seedlings will require pricking off. In the case of such varieties as bedding begonias, petunias and lobelias, this must be done while the plants are very small, or a large part of them will be hopelessly ruined. The surface soil for these, at least in the flats, must be fine, light and rather sandy, and careful watering with a fine rose will be easy to sell, and on this account it will not pay to neglect them at this stage of their growth.

Easter Stock.

It will be exactly a month to Easter when these notes appear in print. March has so far not been specially ungenial and plants have come along satisfactorily. A warm March is often followed by a cold April, as in 1903, and it is well not to trust too much to the increasing solar heat and lengthening days. A week of dark, dull weather may upset all our calculations if we do.

Lilies should now have the first buds commencing to droop. Those with buds all erect should be hurried a little. Better have the flowers open a few days before being needed, as they can be held back nicely in a cold house with plenty of ventilation and the glass shaded. Azaleas, if they show color a week hence, will be timely. So will genistas, rhododendrons and kalmias. Lilacs grown warm should not show flowers until April. It is better to grow these fairly cool, as foliage comes better and flowers have more substance. Marguerites in pots, both yellow and white, should be opening freely now. These can be retarded a long time in a cold house.

Azalea mollis need not have any flowers expanding until two weeks before the date on which they are wanted, and pyrus, prunus, cydonias and staphyleas must not be allowed to open too early, as they do not last long when in flower. Acacia, particularly A. armata, is better not too fully expanded. When a few of the little, yellow, round flowers become brown, they spoil the appearance of a plant and there is little time to pick them over in Easter week. Astilbes should have the spikes pushing above the foliage. Allow grandiflora and astilboides ten days more time than the common Japonica. Hydrangeas must now have their flower heads coloring and will be better grown cooler until Easter. A house with the glass well shaded, plenty of ventilation in pleasant weather and end doors open, should be reserved for plants as they come into flower. Do not on any consideration permit the work of months to be rendered futile by allowing your plants to dry out. Remember they must be well watered now, if they are to do you credit and bring in the necessary dollars.

Lily of the Valley.

Pans of lily of the valley, if well foliaged, are usually in demand at Easter. Specialists in its culture need not be told how to grow it, for they have special houses, with plenty of bottom heat and every convenience. The small country florist, who may only handle a little on such occasions as Easter, can easily contrive a place to force it in. Either stand it directly over the hot water pipes on boards, or, better still, in a case with a glass top, which can be shaded and darkened to draw up the flower stalks and gradually given more light to induce leaf growth. Four weeks before Easter is early enough to start in this way. Plant in pots, pans or flats, as wanted. Remember the pips make no roots while being forced, and it matters not to them what sort of earth they are planted in. Sand is just as good as loam, and is usually preferred by large growers. Valley with a bottom heat of 70 to 75 degrees and top heat 10 degrees lower will be in flower in three weeks. If placed directly on a light bench in a carnation house temperature at once, in full light, the flowers will expand before Easter; nice, stocky flower spikes and heavy foliage, but shorter than the stock grown in cases. Still, it is liked by many buyers.

Brief Reminders.

Do not be in too great a rush to remove winter protection from your hardy plants. Better take away a little of the coarser material only. We may yet have some very cold, biting winds.

Dutch bulbs must be retarded as much as possible. The end of the month is quite early enough to place these in a frame or cool greenhouse.

Keep your schizanthus for Easter pinched until March 20 and see that some stakes are used to keep the plants erect. Grow cool and airy.

Your calceolarias will need shade now. They cannot stand the full sun's rays. Forty-five degrees at night is ample heat for them.

A sowing of Cobæa scandens; Ipomœa grandiflora alba, or moonflower; kudzu vine; maurandia, and Kenilworth ivy, or Linaria Cymbalaria, should now be made. The two last named are useful for hanging baskets and vases.

If you have any call for everlasting flowers, make a sowing of helichrysum, the best variety. The rhodanthes are extremely pretty, with pink and white flowers; so are ammobiums and acrocliniums.

Root a good batch of antirrhinum cuttings from your very best plants. Set out in nursery rows in May. These will give you plenty of early cuttings for another season.

There is yet ample time to root an abundance of coleus, alternanthera, achyranthes and similar foliage plants. Your early batches will now give you plenty of nice tops.

How are your lilies for Memorial day? These should show buds not later than May 1. Spiræas need not be started yet.

A QUESTION ON TAXATION.

Will some one please say, through the columns of the REVIEW, whether or not a city council in the state of Nebraska can pass an ordinance compelling a florist to pay an occupation tax for the purpose of disposing of his product? I also wish to know if a florist is any more subject to pay a tax than would be a farmer who owns and farms a place within the city limits. The only difference I can see is the mode of cultivation.

L. M. BEST.

PLUMOSUS AS A HOUSE PLANT.

I have had quite a few of my customers complain of Asparagus plumosus turning brown and the needles falling. These plants were kept in the living room, with temperatures ranging from 60 to 70 degrees, some receiving no sun, others partial shade. Can you tell what caused the trouble, and if there is a remedy for it?

F. J.

The most probable reason is that the plants have been allowed to become too dry at the root. If the plants were standing in saucers of water, this would also be accountable for the trouble. Usually Asparagus plumosus makes a very desirable house plant. As the fronds become old they will naturally turn brown and drop, but if carefully watered, there should be very little trouble even with this. The fact that they receive only a little sunshine should not affect them if the light is good. C. W.

CONCRETE BENCHES.

A Subject of General Interest.

Even the big cut flower growers, who use acres of tabling, are beginning to take a real, live interest in concrete benches. Pecky cypress has done a great deal to relieve the greenhouse men from the sweltering task of rebuilding benches in the heat of summer, and it has relieved them of the vexation of the accidents which were frequent when hemlock was permitted to go too long unrenewed. But experiments with concrete in greenhouse construction have been so satisfactory that practically every grower is interested in the subject.

Foundations and side-walls can be made of concrete to advantage, but it is in bench construction that this modern greatest. The accompanying illustrations will show the shapes of the various sections and how they lock together. It will be seen that the heavier the load on the bottom sections, the more firmly they hold the sill and side sections. In the top of the post there is a piece of iron which fits in the notches in the ends of the side sections and prevents any accident in the nature of knocking the sill off the posts. Otherwise the bench retains its place and position entirely through its own weight and the weight of the soil and stock.

The Cement.

Any grower can make the molds for manufacturing such sectional benches. He should use a good brand of Portland cement, mixing one part cement to four parts gravel, fine crushed stone or cinders. It is important in all cement work to see that the cement and the rubble are thoroughly mixed. If they are not mixed, the concrete does not hold. The idea is to coat every part of every piece of the gravel or other filling material with the

ONE PIECE BENCHES.

I have noticed many references to concrete construction for greenhouse benches, and wherever one goes among greenhouse owners, it is evident that there is much interest in this subject. I am convinced that concrete benches will be universally adopted for greenhouses as soon as the proper mode of construction has been decided upon, and I wish to give my experience and opinion in regard to this new development in greenhouse building.

After three years of experimenting with several different methods of building benches of concrete I have become satisfied that the bench built in one piece, where it is to remain, has many advantages over the sectional style of construction. I have had built probably as many square feet of cement bench as any grower in this country and I have found that any way I built a sectional or portable bench it cost more by a large percentage than where it was built in one piece, as has been illustrated in recent issues of the REVIEW. The one-piece construction was cheaper because it took less labor and much less material. The beams or carriers are eliminated and the construction is cheapened by omitting the reinforcing material that is necessary where movable slabs are used to make them carry the heavy load. The slabs and other parts consume cement and make a heavy and unwieldy looking structure. I have found that it takes more labor, as well as material, to build a sectional bench than to build a permanent one all in one piece. If you make the sections light, you cannot make them strong, and if you make them strong it is surprising how it eats up material, adds weight and occupies space.

After the several years of experimenting I have adopted the shape and style of the old wood bench: bottom and sides one inch thick, the only reinforcing being with common chicken wire with a 2-inch mesh. I have proved that only the posts are needed to hold up this structure and, so little material being used, I have found that I can build a bench of this character at a first cost less than for a wood bench at the present prices of lumber. It took considerable experimenting to get a mold which was quickly erected, but, having found it, after the mold is in position it is a building material will have its largest fullness. There are almost innumerable styles of construction. Some who have experimented advocate one-piece benches, while others declare for sectional construction. In the first case, the mold is put up in the greenhouse and the bench made all at one time, in one piece, and is not removable. In the second case the molds turn out the pieces separately, the parts may be made in advance of need and the bench put up whenever the house is empty, the bench being movable should circumstances require.

Adopted by Big Growers.

When Elmer D. Smith, Adrian, Mich., was last in Chicago he expatiated so enthusiastically on concrete bench construction that he converted C. L. Washburn to his ideas, and Bassett & Washburn, at Hinsdale, will next season plant a part of their stock on benches built on the Smith pattern. There is no question of the welfare of the stock on concrete benches; plants will grow as well on a cement bench as on one of wood or tiles, providing certain requisites, such as drainage, are provided. In the one-piece bench apertures must be made for the passage of water, but in all styles of sectional construction the cracks between the blocks provide all the drainage that is required.

The Pattern Molds.

Half a dozen ingenious growers have devised patterns for self-locking bench construction. Some of them reinforce their sections by putting in iron, and Mr. Smith puts what are known as cold-twisted lug bars in his blocks to give additional strength where the strain is moistened cement. Then when it is tamped it brings the surfaces together and they will stay. Insufficient mixing or careless tamping leaves spaces between the filling material, and each space weakens the structure by just so much. After the sections have set they may be finished with a little cement made wet enough to work smooth with a trowel.

There are concrete contracting firms in most towns that will make cement benches for florists, and do it at no great cost when they can take weather not sued to outdoor work for turning out the sections. But a florist can readily do the work himself under the same conditions. The first cost will be little if any more than the expense of hemlock benches that have to be renewed every two or three years, and in the end the saving will be considerable.

matter of only a short time to pour in the cement and smoothen.

With no part of the bench over an inch thick and no beams or carriers of any sort, the bench is stronger than necessary for any weight which can be put upon it in practical use. Any amount of drainage can be provided by placing corks in the bottom of the mold, spacing as wanted, and afterward knocking them out.

While I am of the opinion that the one-piece bench is the proper style and construction, any argument for any other style of construction is excellent reading for the greenhouse men in general, for the time is ripe for concrete benches and growers should be glad to be saved the time, labor and money which the pioneers in concrete bench building have spent in working out the most practical styles of construction. #### ORCHID GROWERS ORGANIZE.

A temporary organization for a national orchid society was formed at New York March 14. For several months plans and methods and possibilities have been discussed by those most interested, and at the American Institute rooms a splendid exhibition of orchids was followed in the evening by the initial conference of the new society. W. J. Stewart was elected temporary chairman and Edouard Roehrs temporary secretary. Many letters were read in congratulation, and promised coöperation from all parts of the country. The guarantee fund is already satisfactory, several subscribing $100. On the list of guarantors are Sander & Son, of England; Clement Moore, Julius Roehrs Co., Siebrecht & Son, Lager & Hurrell, Carrillo & Baldwin, Joseph A. Manda and Komitsch & Junge. The committee on organization consists of Messrs, Clement Moore, Dr. Kitchen, Mrs. Wilson, H. A. Siebrecht, Joseph Manda, Messrs. Lager, Rothwell and Nash. This committee will shortly meet and submit names of officers, scope and purposes of the society, etc.

Interesting addresses were made by Messrs. Lager, Hammond, Siebrecht, Herrington, Moore and the chairman, all breathing the highest hopes and ambitions and assurances of harmonious coöperation.

Mr. Nash, of the Bronx Park Museum, generously assured the society of the privileges of a meeting room for its discussions and exhibitions. The attendance numbered thirty. A unanimous vote of thanks was tendered the exhibitors.

The exhibits were as follows: Clement Moore, Hackensack, N. J., E. Knight gardener, a fine display of nine plants of Cattleya Schröderiana and other popular varieties; Charles G. Roebling, Trenton, N. J., James Goodier gardener, two dendrobiums and ten vases of cypripediums in fifteen varieties; Seth Borden, Fall River, Mass., F. Varden gardener, dendrobiums, cattleyas, epiden-drums and Lycaste Skinneri; Joseph A. Manda, West Orange, N. J., Cattleya labiata, C. Trianae and C. Schröderiana, twelve varieties of cypripediums and Oncidium varicosum and Phaius grandifolius; Julius Roehrs Co., twenty vases of cattleyas, cypripediums, dendrobiums, oncidiums, sarcodes, three varieties of phalænopsis and five exhibits of odontoglossum and Cypripedium insignis; Lager & Hurrell, Summit, N. thirty-six exhibits, in plants and flowers of all distinct varieties, the most interesting and valuable of which were Cymbidium eburneum, Oncidium fuscum, Cattleya Schröderiana, Dendrobium nobile var. Amesiae, Cypripedium Mrs. W. A. Roebling, Cattleya Lawrenceana and C. Thayeriana, Laelio-cattleya Mrs. G. C. ### MAIDENHAIR FERNS.

Could maidenhair ferns be successfully grown on a ground bench running east and west, the bench being north of a raised bench on which poinsettias are grown till Christmas, afterwards general stock, or would the ferns require more shade than the raised bench would afford? When should they be planted and how old should the plants be when planted? H. G. C.

Maidenhair ferns could be grown on a solid bed on the north side of such a house, and, except during midsummer, they would not require more shade than that afforded by the plants on the raised bench on the south side of them. There may be more trouble with snails when grown on the low bench, and on the whole the ferns could be more readily controlled when planted on a raised bench.

A good time to plant the ferns would be in May or June, and strong young plants from 2-inch or 3-inch pots are the best stock to use for such a purpose, planting them about ten inches apart in the beds. W. H. TAPLIN.

often asked is, what is the limit of size? We have a house 32x500, even span, continuous ventilation at the top on both sides, containing five benches, which I like very much. It is an easy house to build and maintain. The width could be increased to thirty-four or thirty-six feet at a slight additional cost, and the extra space obtained would be of great value for an extra bench or wider walks. It is an old saying that the best roses grow in the walks, for the more air and light the plants get, the better the results.

We have another house, 54x300, which I like better, with the possible exception that it is not so easy to make repairs on a high roof as on a lower one.

Advantages of Large House.

These large houses are easier to heat than the smaller ones. They catch every ray of sunlight in winter, fires can be banked earlier, and started up later than in the small houses. It is no experiment now, but it is a fact that with the larger body of air the temperature does not fluctuate as it does in a small house. We find that our large house runs even on cold nights, with less trouble than in smaller ones. With ventilation on both sides at the top, and front ventilators hinged at the bottom, so that the air strikes upward instead of directly on the plants, the temperature in warm weather can be controlled in spite of the long stretch of roof. It costs a little more proportionately to build the larger house, for it must be made stronger and braced to withstand any gale that may blow. The steeper the pitch, the greater the resistance, and the large houses are triumphs of the builder's skill.

I think that sixty feet is wide enough for any rose house. The only limits to the length are the size of the field and the purse of the builder. I believe that the largest houses produce the largest flowers, everything else being equal, and no man needs any better argument in favor of this type of house than the fact that men like Elliott and Montgomery, who are the most conservative and at the same time the most progressive rose growers we have, after years of experience with large houses, erect larger ones.

Grafted Stock.

Our next consideration is the practice of grafting, so common now in the place of using own-root plants. I cannot do better than recommend Montgomery's treatise on grafting [Written for the REVIEW and reprinted in pamphlet form.—Ed.] to anyone wanting the subject explained in a digestible manner. I might say, however, buy the best stocks obtainable. As soon as received, we unpack and bury in a cold cellar away from frost, first a layer of loam, then one of stocks until all are covered, taking them out as required for potting, or they can be heeled in a cold greenhouse if there is room and no cellar or shed is available. If you have no cold house in which to start the stocks, clean out a part of benches on the north side in the coldest part of your house and hang up burlap to keep out the sun, but not so as to exclude the air. Keep well damped down and syringed, being careful not to get the roots too wet.

The grafting case, also, if it has to be built in a rose house, should be on the north side, or it will be difficult to keep the heat down as the season advances. Cheesecloth makes a good shade for the grafting case, and under these same con-

ROSE URANIA.

Urania, one of M. H. Walsh's seedlings of American Beauty, has had a better reception in England than it had when first shown to the trade in this country. The Gardeners' Magazine for December 14 has a fine illustration of a single bloom of Urania, and the following notes:

"This recent addition to the somewhat lengthy list of hybrid teas is of American origin, and promises to prove of much value in Great Britain. It was raised by M. H. Walsh, of Woods Hole, Mass., as a seedling from American Beauty, which it resembles in its vigorous and otherwise excellent habit of growth. The flowers are large, full, and of good form, with a finely developed petal, and they have the strong recommendation of being sweetly scented. The bloom illustrated herewith was cut from the open quarters in the nurseries of G. & W. Burch, Peterborough, at quite the end of September, and was five and three-quarters inches in diameter. These facts should be borne in mind in estimating the merits of the variety for exhibition and garden culture. The color is bright and attractive, being best, perhaps, described as cherry-crimson. As a good growth is of much importance, it is satisfactory to be able to state that it is strong and erect, with handsome foliage, and also that the flowers are produced very freely. Messrs. Burch, who exhibited blooms in fine condition at the September exhibition of the National Rose Society, consider the variety a valuable autumnal rose, and they have full justification for their opinion."

MODERN METHODS OF GROWING.

[A paper by Eber Holmes, of Montrose, Mass., read before the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Boston, March 17, 1908.]

Let us look for a moment at the rose-growing industry twenty years ago, that we may better appreciate the situation today. We had then such varieties as Gontier, Bennett, Bon Silene, Safrano, Mermet, and other good ones. It cannot be said that these have run out or have deteriorated. They have simply been superseded by better varieties. We had an illustration of this recently in the Safranoses exhibited by Mr. Elliott at the Boston show.

At that time also we had the old style house, 100 feet long and about eighteen feet wide, with wooden walls and benches built high, to bring the plants up to the light. Now we build glass walls and keep the plants nearer the ground.

Credit for Improvement.

The question might naturally be asked, to what do you attribute the advance in the quality of roses produced today over those of that period? The reply is, first of all, the modern house.

If I had to follow the rating given to flowers in the exhibitions, taking 100 as a total, I would give the modern house forty points. The other sixty I would divide equally between the use of grafted stock, improved methods of growing, and new and better varieties in cultivation today.

Best Size of House.

Taking these points in this order, what is the best house? And another question ditions a cloudy day is to be preferred to a sunny one for grafting.

The Operation of Grafting.

We prefer standing up to a table about the height of a potting bench when grafting. It is as comfortable as the position you must assume when sitting down to this work, and a man can work faster when he does not have to keep changing his position. A good man will graft from 150 to 175 an hour.

It is important that the grafts should not be allowed to wilt, but should be placed in the case as quickly as possible, which should be as airtight as it can be made, and closed up at once.

More plants are killed, perhaps, by improper treatment in the case than in any other way, and there is a good deal in knowing enough to let them alone for the first five days or so if the thermometer reads aright and the plants look fresh and moist. If, however, the case should be too hot, or dry, or seem too full of moisture, I would not hesitate, with the ventilators in the house closed, to open the case for a few minutes and remedy the defect. It is important to keep the water out of the cut until it has healed thoroughly.

Time of Planting.

We find, when buying young stock of new varieties, that we often get more than we pay for in the shape of red spider, etc. In this case we always dip small lots as soon as received in tobacco water, or syringe with whale oil soap to which a little nicotine has been added.

In regard to the time of planting, I have seen roses successfully transplanted at any time of the year; the earlier the better for young stock. It is simply a question of money and convenience, and on large places the planting covers several months.

Different Methods Bring Like Results.

It is not necessary for two men to copy each other too closely to each obtain good results. In fact, this may have been some men's undoing before this.

When we find several kinds of loam in one field, what shall we expect in a country as large as this?

Remarks written on watering are often misleading, for one soil will use up two or three times more water than another; so in other ways.

Take Richmond, for example. I have seen it cut down in the summer with splendid results, and thought that was the proper way to treat it after the first year. I have seen them left without pruning, standing to the top of the stakes, and also tied down, doing absolutely nothing. I have seen others tied down giving an abundance of magnificent flowers. All this goes to show that it is not so much how it is done, as who is doing it. The greatest discoveries of science and manufacturing are sometimes the result of an accident, and it is no less true of some secrets in rose growing today. The observant man, in addition to experimenting, will note every detail in the working of his place, and out of some miscalculation or disaster today will possibly see the way to success later. All men make mistakes; the ones who make the least are the most successful.

There are laws governing plant life and growth which must be obeyed, but the man growing roses for profit, who can distinguish between the superficial and the fundamental, and produce good stock with economy, which is the keynote of commercial success, is well on his way to the top of the ladder.

Soil and Bench Filling.

We have used loam for planting after being piled up one and two years, and have also used it plowed and chopped up in the field one day, and in the house planted the next, without any different results. I would, however, prefer four to six inches of sod rotted and chopped up with cow manure. If this has been put together the previous fall, so much the better, for it is easier to plant in.

On large places the old method of piling up soil ahead has given place to the horses and disc harrow in the spring. The large houses are easier to fill than the old style, where a man pushed a wheelbarrow 100 feet or more. A house up to forty feet wide can easily be filled by removing glass or sash in the sides and driving teams alongside with the loam. Five or six men make a good gang for operating these houses when filling. With two or three men outdoors loading and unloading the carts, and three or four inside, placing, treading and leveling, good progress will be made. Before filling, all woodwork should be whitewashed, or receive a dusting of air-slaked lime. We also use lime mixed with the soil for planting, and particularly in loam and manure for top dressing. It is a good and cheap fertilizer and sweetener of the soil and might be used a great deal more freely than it is.

The Details of Planting.

Before commencing to plant, if the weather is hot, we use a light shade of whiting, syringed on the glass. It is cheap, quick to apply, good for the men and plants, while the work is being done, and can be washed off with the hose if rain does not come in time to take it off.

I do not like a line for planting young stock, as it is in the way and takes too long to move around. We use a marker made of light strips of wood with pegs fastened on. One man can handle it, or two men, one on either side, may work quicker. Being the same width as the bench boards, it cannot get out of line, and the distance in the row is obtained by following the end mark every time it is moved. It will make twenty holes every time it is moved and enables a bed to be carried through at once. Team work comes in to good advantage in planting, where it is important to transfer them quickly.

A good man should be detailed to pick out the stock, for it is useless to waste time on poor plants. It will take one or two men to pick out the plants and knock them out into flats; one with a wagon, to cart to the house where they are to be planted; a couple to dig holes; two good men to plant, and one at least to pound down. Six or eight men working well together will plant 4,000 young plants in a day if the beds are already prepared.

In planting, it is well to grade the plants as they are set out of the flats, placing the larger ones in the back row and the smallest in the front. I would not leave too much dish around each plant, as with the frequent syringings necessary at this time, they collect too much water.

Carried-over Stock.

In replanting stock one year or more old we use no line or marker, but commence at one end of the house, digging up, cleaning out old loam, throwing in new and resetting at one time. We do not like to do more than necessary of this, for it takes five men a month to go through 10,000 square feet of bench and thoroughly overhaul it, and costs $1,000.

Three years seems to be about the limit of age for profit. It has been said that Richmond should be replanted every year, but this is not necessary with us, and others report the same. A feature of Richmond is that while grafted stock makes a larger plant in the fall, giving one or two crops before the own-root plants come into bearing, in the middle of the winter the self-rooted stock is livelier than the grafted, and will throw and feeding chiefly on the lower surface. Injury is most noticeable, as a rule, in secluded locations and upon terminal leaves, which are frequently eaten full of holes. The insect operates chiefly at night, and by day rests in the same location.

As to remedies, the greenhouse leaf-tier is usually controlled by hand picking, or trimming away and destroying the infested leaves or other portions of plants as frequently as detected. This is laborious but effective, as the experience of many correspondents bears witness. Paris green, applied either dry, mixed with about twenty parts of flour, or in the form of a spray, would undoubtedly effect the destruction of the caterpillars, or "worms," and the spray should be applied so as to reach the under surface of the leaves. In some cases it would be well to leave the arsenicals on the plant for some time, not giving them their usual syringing of water. The arsenicals should not be applied with a syringe, but by means of a knapsack or other sprayer, particularly adapted to this purpose. Directions for using the arsenicals are given in Farmers' Bulletin No. 127, a copy of which will be sent to anyone upon request addressed to the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Hydrocyanic acid gas will not kill this moth when used at a strength which will not also injuriously affect the plants. It is possible, however, that the very youngest caterpillars, and other ones just as they are molting or immediately afterwards, will be killed. Additional experiments are necessary to verify this opinion. It is advisable not to place the jars too close to plants such as sweet peas, which W. H. & C. B. state have been injuriously affected by the application of this gas. I would advise the use of six large jars, such as large slop jars.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS

CHRYSANTHEMUM LINTON.

Elmer Smith calls it "very good" and Charles Totty says "it is a splendid thing," so there is really no use of any further endorsement, but many varieties which come well recommended take some time to find their way into the places of the smaller growers. In Linton we have a most desirable single chrysanthemum. It is a light pink on a white, or rather cream ground—a beautiful combination, fit to be used for all occasions outside of a bride's bouquet. You can grow this variety for pots or cut flowers. If for the latter, allowing three to six stems to the plant will give you flowers which will retail at $1.50 to $2 per dozen. It is remarkable how popular the single mums have become of late. It seems that there is a great future for this class, and there will be an increasing demand for them if the public sees more of them. There is no doubt but what they are at least as well adapted for house decorations as the big fellows. They are excellent keepers, and for pot plants ideal. Every retail grower should at least have a few of them, and while the chestnut, terra cotta or crimson bronze colors are not desirable, the clear pink, white and yellow are bound to sell, and will bring as good returns for the bench room they occupy as the biggest Eaton or Appleton grown.

THE GREENHOUSE LEAF-TIER.

We are sending you by mail today a few specimens of a small, triangular, brown miller or moth, and ask for some suggestion as to ridding the house of these pests, which are doing considerable damage.

Their eggs produce a green worm that eats the foliage from the sweet peas, chrysanthemums and carnations. We have tried the hydrocyanic acid gas fumigation, but it did not kill the moth, while it did do a little damage to the sweet peas that were nearest the jars. Possibly we did not have enough jars, using but four to a house 28x100 feet, with two ounces and a half of cyanide of potassium to a pint each of sulphuric acid and water.

W. H. & C. B.

The small, triangular, brown miller, or moth, which W. H. & C. B. send and about which they desire information, is the greenhouse leaf-tier, or Phlyctenia ferrugalis Hbn. This insect is one of the most troublesome pests in greenhouses and is well known to florists. It first attracted attention as a pest as late as 1890, although there is no doubt that it was present generally in greenhouses throughout the country long before that time. It is, in fact, like many other noxious insects, of cosmopolitan distribution. It is also what is termed a general feeder, being as nearly omnivorous in its caterpillar or active feeding stage as almost any insect known to science. It has attracted rather more attention as an enemy to violets and other ornamentals and does not confine itself to greenhouses, affecting many crop plants, such as celery, beets, cabbage, tobacco and the like. Sometimes it does great damage in celery fields.

As to the habits of the insect, the moths fly usually toward sundown, resting during the day on the lower surfaces of the leaves. In the warm and equable temperature of greenhouses this species easily develops from egg to adult, completing its entire life cycle in five weeks, giving the possibility of many generations when breeding indoors.

The caterpillar, or larva, has a habit not unusual with similar species, of concealing itself on its food plant by drawing together portions of a leaf with silk

SOIL AND THE FLORIST

Moisture and Drainage.

As I have noted, the mechanical condition of the soil determines to a very great extent its moisture-holding properties, or, in other words, its drainage. This is a very important consideration, for upon the moisture content of the soil depends the soil solution, which is the minute quantity of water which surrounds the soil particles and which carries in solution the plant foods which have been derived from the soil particles, either organic or inorganic, by means of fermentation, decomposition and bacterial action. In many agricultural operations, including greenhouse work, proper moisture conditions for the plant determine more than any other factor the resultant crop, for if everything else is satisfactory—temperature, sunlight, food supply—and moisture alone lacking, none of these have any beneficial effects. In fact, as soon as the moisture supply is withheld the beneficent action of the sun becomes deleterious, the heat which we attempt to supply to stimulate growth becomes injurious, and the large amount of available plant food in the soil, instead of proving a benefit, becomes a factor of unrest. The plant suffers, declines and dies, but by the proper regulation of the moisture supply the plant thrives. Its functions can be maintained to a high degree, and, in fact, many of the injurious pests and organisms with which we have to contend in our greenhouse work can be controlled through a proper use of water. There is no more effective agent in the control of the red spider than water.

Agriculturists, and particularly truck gardeners, are alive to the importance of an adequate supply of water, to be used just at the proper time. Where extensive garden operations are conducted, a heavy expense is often incurred in order to provide an adequate supply of water, which may be used only two or three times during the whole growing season, but the use of the water just at these critical periods measures the profit to be derived from the crop. Without water the crop would be a failure, and under artificial conditions, such as exist in greenhouses, an artificial supply is absolutely necessary.

Watering With Warm Water.

In view of these facts, numerous experiments have been conducted to determine the effect of using water at different temperatures in watering plants, the idea being to determine whether or not growth could be stimulated by the use of warm water, and if the soil temperature could be increased so as to lessen the cost of heating by this means. The general conclusions which may be drawn from these experiments seem to be as follows: That the temperature of the water, so long as it is above the freezing point, has no very marked influence upon the character or growth of the product. In fact, plants watered with water at 32 degrees and those watered with water at a temperature of 70 degrees show very little difference in the rate of growth, maturity or yield of product. The benefit which might be expected to come from the addition of warm water to the soil is only temporary. The temperature is only temporarily raised by the amount of water necessary for the requirements of the plant. When cold water is applied the temperature of the soil is for the time being slightly reduced, but it soon recovers its normal, and in the case of the use of very warm water the temperature is temporarily increased, but very quickly returns to the normal, whatever that may be, according to the temperature at which the house is maintained, so that it has been found that the time and expense necessary in heating water for use on greenhouse crops are not justified.

BUYING NEW VARIETIES.

Mr. Baur Replies to Mr. Osborn.

I have read with much interest, in the REVIEW for March 5, Mr. Osborn's answer to my inquiry and I wish to thank him for giving his views so openly and concisely. He shows how far apart our ideas may be of a term as applied in everyday usage. I thought when I penned my inquiry that perhaps Mr. Osborn could give us some information which would help us in the selection of new varieties each season, enabling us to choose those which we would find valuable and to avoid those which we would not care for. I find, however, that I cannot agree with him on any of the ideas he sets forth and so I will give my ideas, and I would like to hear whether he does not agree that our plan is by far the better one. I am simply trying to get at the most up-to-date method of handling this problem. I should like to see anyone who feels interested in the subject take a hand in the discussion, and if he can show us both where we are wrong, I for one will give him credit.

The question of what is meant by a new variety is not so important, as long as we each understand the other as to what he calls new. In my inquiry I meant varieties which are being introduced or offered to the trade for the first time. Some call them novelties, but we call them simply new varieties. We never call varieties new when they are in their second year, or have been on the market at least a year. It cannot be said that they are not comparatively new, and in fact quite new to those who failed to buy when they were introduced. If you follow that theory, however, a variety may be called new for a number of years; in fact, as long as it is not grown by every grower in the business. So we confine the term "new" to the introductions of the current season. The second season a variety either takes its place among the standard varieties or else it is rejected.

The Question of Expenditure.

Mr. Osborn is conservative, it seems to me, in the amount of money a grower of 25,000 plants should expend each season on new varieties. I should have said at least twice as much as the sum he names, and I figure it out in this way: $100 will buy at least eight varieties and 100 plants of each variety. The grower who benches 25,000 plants, if he strikes a good thing, will likely want to bench from 1,000 to 2,000 plants the second season. If he wants to plant more he can, of course, buy what he needs. Most varieties will give from ten to twenty splendid cuttings to the plant, without impairing their vitality.

We figure that it pays us to buy more or less of about every variety offered to the trade, unless we have reason to think that the variety is not suitable to our trade. Naturally we buy more of varieties which we had occasion to examine than we do of those which we had never seen. There are many reasons for this, and the strongest one is our experience in selecting varieties in the past. Years ago we thought we could select a limited number of varieties in the manner Mr. Osborn suggests, by visiting other establishments where the varieties were growing, reading reports, etc., but we soon found that plan quite impractical. We found that we missed it oftener than we hit it, and frequently we let the best varieties go by. Gradually we worked into our present method, and under this method we find that few if any good things escape us. We buy every season some varieties which we do not care to grow more than the first year, and we never have failed yet to get one or more varieties which we were glad to add to our list.

The Unexpected Happens.

And I will say, further, that these good varieties are frequently found where we least expect them, and where we expect the most we often meet with the worst disappointment. Didn't growers without number, and experts too, travel over to Lafayette and up to Joliet to see Fiancee growing, and, after satisfying themselves of its value, place larger orders for cuttings than they had ever placed before? I myself saw the variety growing on both places not less than three times and saw it at exhibitions many more times, and I was fooled like the rest, and disappointed like the rest. The same thing happened with Adonis, Prosperity, Mrs. Theo. Roosevelt, Flamingo, Ethel Crocker and Lillian Pond, and I could mention others. If we had plunged on these varieties, as we would have done except that we had adopted our present plan, we would no doubt have joined the calamity howlers long ago. Instead, however, we secured each season other varieties of great value which more than made up for the loss on these disappointments. We have never felt inclined to complain, as we have heard others do. Taken as a whole, we find each season's offerings in new varieties an improvement over those of the year before, and by selecting what we consider best for our trade and conditions we improve our stock every season.

As to reports, both verbal and in print, while they are of course honest enough, yet they are of little value, because they are in most cases given out after a superficial examination or are based on rumors, etc. Often only a vase of blooms on exhibition is seen to base a report on. For instance, a few years ago a variety was introduced too far away from here for me to go to see it growing and it was never exhibited where I could see it. We were on the point of ordering it, when a traveling man in whose judgment we have considerable faith happened in, and, being from the same vicinity as the variety in question, he was questioned as to its value, etc. We were advised not to bother with it, as it amounted to little. Later we were induced to try it, anyway, and that variety proved to be one of the best in its color on our place for several years. So much for reports, honest as they may be. We reason that every variety which is introduced has shown merit at least on the introducer's place, and that should be sufficient guarantee that it is at least worthy of a trial.

Replacing Old Varieties.

Then there is the question of replacing varieties with better ones as they are offered. Mr. Osborn's idea of replacing varieties only when they show deterioration is certainly not a progressive one. We want not to keep our stock as good as it is now, but we want to better it at every opportunity. Suppose, for instance, a man would be growing Scott, Daybreak, Silver Spray and varieties of those days as good as he ever grew them; would he stand any show against our varieties of today? The same can be said of more recent varieties, only the difference is not so great.

As for letting your neighbor test the varieties for you, I can only say that it is one of the most selfish ideas I can imagine, and does not deserve any consideration, even if it were practical, which it is not. Your neighbor and yourself may have different success with a variety and, of course, your estimation of the variety will differ as widely.

As to the American Carnation Society doing anything along the line of determining which varieties will prove to be profitable to grow, you will never see it. As one member put it some time ago, it is not within the province of that society, and if it attempted anything of the kind it could only fail. The brightest men in that society gave the matter their best consideration for several years, without working out any plan that would hold water for a minute. If anyone thinks he has a feasible plan, let him come forward with it, and render the carnation growers a service for which, I am sure, they will give him their everlasting thanks.

I have not gone into details as fully on some of these points as I might have done, nor have I brought out all the points, but I have consumed enough space for this time. I have tried to show that it pays to keep up with the new varieties, and that by buying in a limited way of a dozen varieties instead of plunging on one, you stand a dozen chances of getting the good one against the one chance of the plunger. I hope others will give their views on this most important question, and I feel sure that through discussion the disseminators and a certain part of the buyers can come to a better understanding.

THE DEATH ROLL.

Joseph M. Gasser.

Death claimed Joseph M. Gasser, of Cleveland, March 12, at Flint, Mich., where he had been for two months taking treatment in a sanitarium. About fifteen months ago he suffered a mental breakdown, but death was due to heart failure.

Mr. Gasser had been a resident of Cleveland during nearly his entire life.

He was a native of Switzerland, born in 1841, but when he was only a child his parents emigrated to the United States, locating in the Forest City in 1854. While his boyhood days were passed amid surroundings and under circumstances which limited his opportunities for securing an education, he did not neglect the cultivation of his mind, but improved it by reading, traveling and experimenting and, being possessed of more than ordinary faculties, he acquired a fund of information on general subjects far in advance of many men who in youth had the advantages of good schools and colleges. Mr. Gasser began at the bottom, and year after year mounted the ladder until he was regarded as one of Cleveland's most successful business men.

In 1861, when he was 19 years of age, he enlisted and served loyally in the war of the rebellion, as a member of Company B, Seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry, serving in the ranks until 1864, when he received honorable discharge. He participated in many of the principal battles of the war and was wounded in the left arm and side, March 23, 1862, at Winchester, being incapacitated for service for some time.

In 1872, he made his first business venture on his own responsibility, opening a stationery and candy store, which he carried on for six years, gradually drifting into the line of enterprise to which he devoted his entire attention for more than a quarter of a century. The start was one of the modest order. Flowers sent in weekly as a gift from Mrs. Gasser's mother's garden to beautify the window and soda fountain were a great attraction. Customers admired and wanted them. Mr. Gasser, being of a generous disposition, gave a few blossoms with each purchase. Soon the demand became so great that a small sum was charged for the flowers. This proved very satisfactory and the business continued to grow. To one familiar with the large proportions of the business now done by the J. M. Gasser Co. the early vicissitudes are amusing, but at the time the troubles were real enough. As related by one closely identified with the work, "The flowers were tied up in

A Group of Well-known Omaha Florists.

25-cent and 50-cent bouquets, with a home-made paper holder thrown in. The best part of the bouquet was ground pine and broom splints, the flowers being short-stemmed primroses, fuchsias, geraniums and other short stuff. A plate of boutonnieres was always on the counter at 5 cents each.

"The first funeral design, a wreath, was constructed of twigs cut from shrubs formed on a hoop from a tub, the flowers and green tied on. For this a charge of $1 was made when the design was called for. The lady was so well pleased that she gave $1.50, saying that $1 was not enough for it. When short of flowers at a time when he had what he would call a large order, a wreath, anchor or cross and star, the whole amounting to perhaps $5, Mrs. Gasser would come to the rescue. Knowing the art of making wax flowers, she would hurriedly make up the larger flowers, such as callas, camellias and tuberose. Customers were so pleased with them that they would frequently come back after two and three weeks to tell how well they kept. Then Mr. Gasser would explain. The abutilon also had to fill in double space by being turned inside out, turning back the petals and pinching out the column of stamens and substituting a little double primrose drawn through with wire. People wondered what flower it was. And so they maneuvered in all sorts of ways to fill the orders."

By careful methods and perseverance, the business was developed and the range of operations extended until the enterprise became one of the most extensive of its kind in the state. A few years ago, it being necessary to rebuild the plant and provide room for further growth, the greenhouses were removed to Rocky River, about nine miles from the city, where there is approximately 250,000 feet of glass. The city store is at 232-234 Euclid avenue, where both a wholesale and retail business is conducted. There will be no change in the management of the company. Mr. Gasser leaves a widow and one daughter, Mrs. J. C. Pettee.

Isaac Cooper.

Isaac Cooper, who was employed by B. H. Schloemer, on Florissant avenue, St. Louis, Mo., fell dead late in the evening of March 9, while at work in the greenhouses. Mr. Cooper was 63 years of age, and a widower.

Julius C. Gerlach.

Julius C. Gerlach, of Newark, N. J., died March 9 of heart disease, following an attack of asthma. His death occurred at St. Augustine, Fla., where he had gone last November in the hope of regaining his health. He was a member of the firm of Begerow & Gerlach until five years ago, when he retired from business. He was born in Germany 64 years ago.

Prof. W. A. Kellerman.

Professor William Ashbrook Kellerman, head of the department of botany at Ohio State University, died in the jungles of Guatemala, March 8, of malarial fever. In company with a number of students, he had left for Central America December 17, to study the botanical features of that region. Professor Kellerman was born in Ashville, O., 57 years ago, and was a graduate of Cornell University. He was the founder and editor of the Journal of Mycology and Ohio Mycology, and the author of several botanical works.

J. M. Gasser.

C. T. C. Deake.

Cyrus Towner Curtice Deake, the founder of the Idlewild Floral Co., at Asheville, N. C., died March 12, at the age of 84 years. Mr. Deake was born at Providence, N. Y., December 5, 1824. He graduated from Bucks academy and taught school in that section of New York for several years. In January, 1850, he accepted a position as tutor in a family living on a plantation near Savannah, Ga. While teaching at Jonesboro, Tenn., he met Miss Josephine Simpson, whom he married July 16, 1855, and who survives. No children was the result of the union, the only relatives surviving being two nieces, his wife and J. W. C. Deake, of Asheville, former vice-president of the S. A. F.

Soon after the beginning of the war Mrs. Deake went to her old home in Tennessee, where she remained during the war while Mr. Deake went to Alabama in an engineering corps in charge of some niter works of the Confederacy. He read law and went into mica mining with J. W. C. Deake. In 1875 he bought the Bakersville Independent, of which he became editor. In 1879 he sold his mining property and devoted his time to the newspaper until the summer of 1880, when he sold out and began the publication of the Asheville News. The publication of the Asheville News was kept up until 1884. In 1887 he started in the florist business which afterwards became the Idlewild Floral Co., composed of C. T. C. Deake, Mrs. J. B. Deake and J. W. C. Deake. This business was maintained until two years ago, when the greenhouses were leased. During several years he was in charge of the company's downtown flower store.

Joseph Kaiser.

Joseph Kaiser, aged 58 years, a florist of Belleville, Ill., fell dying at his home, 721 East Seventh street, March 14, at 2:30 o'clock of apoplexy. He had been under treatment for heart trouble for some months, but seemed as well as usual. Mr. Kaiser had been a resident of Belleville all of his life, and was well to do. He is survived by one son, Joseph Kaiser, Jr., and one daughter, Mrs. Peter Freitag, and four grandchildren.

Erank Sahan.

Frank Sahan, who was florist in the park system at Omaha, died very suddenly March 13.

PIGEON MANURE.

I can get a large quantity of pigeon manure and would like to know whether it is suitable for use in any of the following ways: In liquid form on carnations and roses; as a mulch, with an equal quantity of soil, on the same crops; in composting soil for the next crop; as a top-dressing for outside crops, such as sweet peas, asters and roses. What is its value per ton for such uses? J. P. K.

Pigeon manure, being so much stronger than barnyard manure and possessing strong caustic properties, must be used with great caution when applied to greenhouse crops. As a mulch it should be composted in the proportions of one part of manure to eighteen of soil, and should be worked over for at least two weeks before using. For use in liquid form, begin with one-half peck to a barrel of water. That is strong enough for a first application.

For outside crops a compost of one part manure to ten of soil will be strong enough for mulching.

Pigeon manure can be procured in some localities very cheaply, while in others it is quoted at $15 to $20 per ton. Where the manure is clean it is worth that price. RIBES.

THE WEEKLY

is printed Wednesday evening and mailed early Thursday morning. It is earnestly requested that all advertisers and correspondents mail their "copy" to reach us by Monday, or Tuesday at latest, instead of Wednesday morning, as many have done in the past.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

INCORPORATED BY ACT OF CONGRESS MARCH 4, '01

Officers for 1908: President, F. H. Traendly, New York; vice-president, George W. McClure, Buffalo; secretary pro tem., Willis N. Rudd, Morgan Park, Ill.; treasurer, H. B. Beatty, Pittsburg.

Annual convention, Niagara Falls, August 18 to 21, 1908.

First National Flower Show, Chicago, November 9 to 15, 1908; W. F. Kasting, Buffalo, chairman.

THE man with a good batch of kentias next August will not need to worry about finding a market for them.

THE parcels post idea meets with the approval of almost everyone except the country merchant and his friend, the city jobber.

W. C. SCOVELL, Malta, O., says that he has found solid beds much better than raised benches for both carnations and chrysanthemums.

THE daily papers of Cleveland, O., in their notices of the death of J. M. Gasser, credit him with having accumulated at least half a million dollars in the florists' business.

SEVERAL of the usual autumn flower shows will be omitted this year, to give those who are relied upon to make them successful an opportunity to devote all their energies to the national show at Chicago.

IN addition to the long list of special premiums for the rose show at Chicago March 25 to 27, published last week, H. F. Michell Co., Philadelphia, offers a silver vase valued at $25 for fifty blooms of Kate Moulton.

SOME otherwise progressive growers still seem to think any old piece of letter paper is good enough for them to use in ordering supplies. A printed letter-head would be worth while, if for no other reason than that it is businesslike.

EBER HOLMES, whose address before the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Boston appears in this issue of the REVIEW, has earned for the Montrose Greenhouses, Montrose, Mass., a wide reputation for the successful handling of Richmond, Killarney, Liberty, Maid and Bride.

THE sweet-william and wallflower, like many other good and beautiful things, gave place temporarily to subjects more showy, but not more worthy. The return of the old favorites may not mean the displacing of the newer, but a place, and a prominent one at that, will have to be found for them.

Results bring advertising.
The REVIEW brings results.

CLEAN up your store now, so it will look its best at Easter.

AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY.

The annual meeting and exhibition of the American Rose Society will be held in Chicago next week. Secretary Benjamin Hammond already has taken up his headquarters at the Stratford hotel, Michigan avenue and Jackson boulevard.

The exhibition will be held in Blackstone hall in the Art Institute on Michigan avenue at the foot of Adams street, opening at 5 p. m., Wednesday, March 25, and continuing on the two following days.

The annual meeting for the transaction of business will convene in Fullerton hall in the Art Institute at 7:45 p. m. Wednesday, March 25, a second session being held on Thursday at 2:30 p. m., with a third session on Friday if necessary. Aside from routine business papers are promised as follows: "Roses in Colorado," by J. A. Valentine, Denver; "A Rose Garden," by W. A. Manda, South Orange, N. J.; "Soils and Their Adaptation to Varieties," by G. B. Maynardier, Washington, D. C.; "Forcing Roses in Pots for Easter," by Robert Craig, Philadelphia; "The Proper Size of Greenhouse for Growing Roses for Commercial Purposes," by W. H. Elliott, Brighton, Mass.; "The Part the Rose Plays in Decorations," by J. F. Sullivan, Detroit.

The visitors will be entertained by the Chicago Florists' Club at a banquet at the Union restaurant, 111 Randolph street, Thursday evening, March 26.

The judges are John H. Dunlop, of Toronto, and Emil Buettner, Park Ridge, Ill., with the third judge yet to be named.

NATIONAL FLOWER SHOW.

Premium List Ready.

The preliminary premium list for the national flower show, to be held in Chicago November 6 to 15, has been issued. Those who have not received copies may obtain them by addressing J. H. Burdett, secretary, 1411 First National Bank building, Chicago.

The list and rules occupy twenty-six closely printed pages and it is no exaggeration to say that no such list of premiums has ever been offered anywhere in the world for an exhibition of floricultural products. That the national flower show will be the greatest event in the history of our trade cannot be doubted by anyone who studies the premium list.

The premiums are the most liberal ever offered for a flower show, exceeding in value, on the average, those annually offered in Chicago, where the value of the rewards for exhibitors is always liberal. They exceed in value in most classes the large money awards made at the exceptionally successful world's fair flower show in 1904, and there are nearly twice as many classes, the list showing 349 classes. Should any exhibitor fail to find a regular class for his exhibit he can come in under No. 344, in which $200 and a number of medals have been set aside "to encourage exhibitors to show new, unusual, interesting or educational exhibits coming within the proper scope of this show and not specifically provided for in other classes."

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The general report is that the market is "just fair." A majority of the wholesalers say their daily sales are running about as they were last year, but March of last year had some dull days and conditions continue far from satisfactory. However, there is less complaint than has been noted in the last two or three weeks. Either those in the market are becoming accustomed to the situation and are accepting it, or they are consoling themselves with the thought that the money income in the market is about like last year, or with the other thought that in the latter end of March we are, in normal years, approaching the season of low values. The quantity of stock handled is, however, out of proportion to the money return, and as long as this disproportion continues, there will be complaint.

The spring crop of Beauties is on in earnest and prices have taken another drop in the last week, in spite of improved quality. There are houses cutting as high as 800 to 1,000 long-stemmed Beauties per day and even this record will be beaten within the next week if the weather is favorable to production. The man who can handle fancy Beauties in quantity at moderate prices should begin to get his lines out.

There has been a further recession in the price of all other roses because of increasing supply. Quality is of the best throughout the market. To growers and wholesalers it seems a shame to sell first grade roses at half what they brought a month ago, but to retailers it looks like the working of the law of averages.

There is no change in the carnation market, although averages are steadily working lower. This is because of the necessity of cleaning out large lots at cheap prices; the wholesalers are underbidding each other for the big orders.

The sale for white for St. Patrick's day was not as heavy as anticipated, although nearly all stores showed dyed flowers.

Violets are in heavy supply, but clear out well at cheap prices. Sweet peas are more abundant than heretofore, but the best continue to sell well. Bulbous stock moves slowly. The southern jonquils are an obstruction. Callas are specially overabundant, but Easter lilies are slow to move. There has been a let-up in the demand for funeral work. Valley is in oversupply and not all offered can be marketed.

There is reported to be some improvement in the demand for green goods, especially smilax and asparagus strings.

As indicating conditions elsewhere, several consignments of valley have been received from New York in the last week and growers in southern Illinois who usually ship to St. Louis are now shipping heavily to Chicago.

Various Notes.

W. J. Keimel writes the REVIEW: "I would like to state that starting in business in Elmhurst we are building four houses 27x200 to grow roses, Killarney and Richmond especially." Mr. Keimel was for over eight years with the Poehlmann Bros. Co. and will be the active man of the firm. His partner is W. H. Wendland.

Percy Jones says that W. S. Garland's young stock of carnations is the finest he ever saw and that all the Garland growers are in splendid shape for an early start for next year.

Bassett & Washburn say that the March business thus far has compared with last year more favorably than February compared. Sales are as great as a year ago, although no plant sales are included, and last year they were shipping much young stock by this date.

John Potts, who has worked as propagator for a number of growers in this vicinity, was stricken with paralysis March 12 at the greenhouses of the J. D. Thompson Carnation Co., Joliet. He has since been at Silver Cross hospital, Joliet, unable to move or speak. The Thompson Co. has no knowledge of his relatives, but would like to hear from them.

E. C. Moore, with two stores, one at 826 West Sixty-third street, the other at 272 East Fifty-fifth street, says business, while it might be heavier, is quite fair and the price of stock leaves a good margin.

There is a big bazaar on at Brooke's Casino this week, for Marks Nathan Jewish Orphan Home, and B. Abrahamson has a fine flower booth there.

Andrew McAdams is expected home from Florida about April 1. He writes that his health has been much benefited, but that he recently had toothache and had to go forty miles to a dentist.

Wietor Bros. say that White Lawson has earned a place as the leading white carnation with them. White Cloud has been their standby for many years, paying them better than any other white after most growers for this market had displaced it with some newer sort.

Mrs. F. Beu says that as St. Patrick's day approached, the sale for her green carnation dye increased and the total was beyond her expectations.

Louis H. Winterson has returned, after nine months spent at Tacoma and other cities on the Pacific coast, and again has his coat off at the Winterson Seed Store.

The Fleischman Floral Co. had the Dean wedding March 17, one of the largest of the Lenten season. The bride's bouquet was Winterson's orange blossoms.

John Ghormly, of Canger & Ghormly, says that the transient business on State street has dropped off a little, but regular customers are buying about as well as ever. He says the difference in the wholesale price of stock more than makes up to his firm the loss from any falling off in business, and thinks it is about the same with other retailers.

The A. L. Randall Co. reports that one Rhinebeck grower is shipping to them 75,000 violets a week.

G. H. Pieser, president of the Kenicott Bros. Co., returned March 15 from West Baden, benefited by the trip, but far from well.

Weiland & Risch have bought the glass for about 45,000 square feet of new houses, but have not decided whether or not to use it all this season.

Matt Mann has planted 6,000 bulbs of his red gladiolus and expects to have the first flowers ready April 10 to 15.

The Florists' Club's committee on Rose Society convention had a meeting at the Union for luncheon March 16, when all arrangements for next week's rose show were closed up. P. J. Foley was appointed chairman of the reception committee, with authority to select the other members.

The Poehlmann Bros. Co. has this week acquired an additional piece of ground of about an acre and a quarter between its property and the railroad at Morton Grove, which was needed to round out the corporation's holdings. - About 30,000 feet of carnation houses will be put on the tract this summer.

For at least ten years E. E. Pieser has advocated the selection of a committee, or the arrangement of some other means for setting a bottom price for stock in this market. He calls attention to the prolonged period of oversupply as furnishing another evidence of the value to the growers of such an arrangement, if perfected and adhered to.

The E. F. Winterson Co. is this week distributing the second annual catalogue of Winterson's Seed Store, forty pages and colored cover. A few warm days have caused counter trade to again start up in good volume with them.

Bassett & Washburn received a half column notice in the Tribune March 14, because of their efforts to get action on a Greek who carries a big roll of bills but refuses to settle an account for stock for his store in the basement under McVicker's theater. They had him in the debtor's court, where he was required to turn over all his personal effects, and the judge ordered the Greek's wife to appear next Friday and account for the money she had received out of the store. Bassett & Washburn are intent on showing the Greeks that they cannot with impunity violate their obligations to the wholesalers.

George M. Garland is preparing to add Frank Garland's cement bench construction to his line. The sections will not be sold, only the moulds for making them.

Jens Jensen had a fine article on "Gardening on Home Grounds" in last week's issue of the Saturday Evening Post, said to be the most widely circulated weekly publication printed in America.

The banquet to Rose Society visitors will take place at the Union restaurant, 111 Randolph street, next week, Thursday evening, March 26. The Union is now florists' headquarters and everyone feels at home there. There should be a good local turnout, for 100 guests outside of the fifty-mile radius are expected.

George Asmus and W. N. Rudd go to Niagara Falls next week to attend the meeting of the executive committee of the S. A. F.

Frank Oechslin has worked up a fine stock in his new place on West Adams street. Recent visitors say that the stock is the largest and finest ever available in the west. It includes a large line of decorative plants, with flowering stock coming along for Easter.

In addition to the special premiums for next week's rose show as published last week, Peter Reinberg offers $50 in three prizes meant for the actual grower of any commercial exhibit, and not for the exhibitor excepting in the case where he does his own growing. These are to be awarded to such three commercial exhibits of cut roses as, in the opinion of the judges, reveal the best specimens of the growers' work in rose growing. The object is to recognize the man who actually does the good work.

E. C. Amling had a single order one day this week for 25,000 violets.

At E. H. Hunt's it is said the supply business for Easter promises to be heavier than ever before.

Vaughan & Sperry say the growers are buying fertilizers at a rate that is no indication of low prices for cut stock. The call for shredded or pulverized cattle manure shows that the home article is becoming scarcer every year.

A. H. Budlong says they have practically eliminated smoke by using Pocahontas coal, but are still experimenting with Illinois coals and smoke consumers.

Joseph Foerster has double-decked his corner of the Flower Growers' market to provide for the storage of boxes.

Among the week's visitors were C. W. Skinner, Troy, O.; Geo. C. Roeder, of C. Young & Sons Co., St. Louis; W. M. Lindsay, Birmingham, Ala.; C. Lund, Wausau, Wis.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

We can truthfully say that last week was one of the worst that the flower business has ever experienced in this city. The demand was practically nothing and the supply of stock was about as heavy as we ever see it. Had it not been for the street fakers thousands of flowers would have been thrown on the dump, and it is a question whether it would not have been better for the business had they been thrown away instead of being sold at the prices which they brought. It was simply a matter of selling to the fakers or throwing the stock away, as the store men would not even make an offer for it and, in fact, you could not even give it to them. They said that there was no business and in consequence they did not want the stock at any price. The above conditions were not confined to any one variety of flowers, as is usually the case during a glut, but everything was included, with perhaps the one exception of red roses. Thousands of Enchantress and white carnations were ordered and delivered Sunday and Monday for St. Patrick's day, to be dyed green. This in itself took a big load from the market and relieved the glut so far as carnations were concerned. It remains to be seen whether conditions will be permanently benefited. Growers claim that the climax has been reached and that this week will see business return to the normal. It is to be hoped that these predictions are correct.

Michigan growers have been sending large consignments of flowers to this market and I am afraid that the returns will not be very satisfactory, but I suppose that they have been having as dull business as we have and so will understand.

The Market.

Gentle spring arrived this year on an early train and all prophecies of continued cold seem smashed into smithereens. It is appropriate that I use this word, writing on Monday, for Tuesday is St. Patrick's day. There will be 50,000 Irishmen in the parade and everyone of them will wear, I hope, a green carnation, not that I approve of the fashion or believe in coloring the beauties of nature, but anything is welcome that will relieve the overstocked market, and the sons of old Erin will certainly make the white carnation surplus look green. The shamrock is in every retail window, from the tiny plants in 2-inch pots upward, and the demand for them has already demonstrated where all the emigrants from the old sod have located and why New York will use more of the tokens of sentiment so dear to the Irish heart than all the rest of the country put together.

Roses began to fall early last week, but now we may expect the present range of values to hold until Easter. Beauties fell to 20 cents for the best the last of the week, and all roses joined the procession. Carnations are already at summer prices, and violets are even lower for the fresh arrivals than seemed cheap for the second day leftovers of a year or two ago. Thousands go at 25 cents per hundred on arrival. Imagine where they fall when turned over to the gentry of the streets for distribution. There is nothing now the street merchants do not handle, except orchids and gardenias.

Spring flowers of every kind are here. The windows are already entrancing with these combinations and Easter plants of every kind are arriving, the advance guard of the largest and finest assortment the growers have ever prepared for the holiday season.

Various Notes.

It was a preliminary certificate and not a certificate of merit awarded Anton Schultheis at the last meeting of the New York Florists' Club for his exhibit of the new Baby Rambler rose, Apple Blossom.

Members of the New York Florists' Club will be delighted to hear that their old home, in the Grand Opera House building on Twenty-third street, has been secured for the club's future meetings and that the next session, Monday, April 13, will be held there. There should be a grand congratulatory reunion on that occasion and a splendid exhibition. Caterer Will Rickards expects to throw himself for the celebration.

St. Patrick's day was celebrated this week by the veteran salesman, William Elliott, and by the Cleary Horticultural Co., in the first auction sales of the season. Hardy roses, bulbs, nursery stock, shrubbery, all were under the hammer, with an encouraging attendance, the weather bringing out the suburbanites in anxious anticipation of early planting. Every Tuesday and Friday these clarion voices will ring out until June.

The latest sensation is a projected floricultural retail association, which, rumor says, is to have branches in all the large cities of the country, with a noted Broadway florist at its head. In

Marshall, 146 West Twenty-third street, and will bowl at the Albion alleys, 117 West Twenty-third street, every Friday evening at 8 o'clock. A membership of twenty is already assured and great enthusiasm is displayed. There will be a keen contest for the honor of position in the winning five, whose transportation is guaranteed by the generosity of the president of the S. A. F. Only members of the New York Florists' Club are eligible for membership in the bowling club. Splendid alleys have been en-

At latest accounts he and the police were still hunting for the robbers.

John Moller, for nearly twenty years in the employ of Siebrecht & Son, fell from a tree he was trimming in one of the New York streets last week and suffered internal injuries from which he died, after great suffering, at the St. Vincent hospital, March 13. Mr. Siebrecht speaks in the highest terms of his faithfulness and character.

Alfred Poehelon, of the Bomb Floral Co., Detroit, was a visitor last week. Out-of-town florists are coming now to select their Easter plants. The New York stores have already made their selections, and last week every retailer I called on was on Long Island or in Jersey, purchasing the Easter stock. #### Current Comment.

Green dyed flowers held the board the first of this week and thousands of green carnations and roses were disposed of. The call exceeded that of a year ago and several Irish societies ordered large quantities.

Trade last week was exceptionally good, both at the retail stores and greenhouses. The demand for roses, violets and carnations has been unusually active. Spring flowers are also selling well. The weather is ideal for the trade and numerous parties have added to the demand for flowers. Funeral work has also helped the trade considerably.

The Schoen Floral Co. added greatly to its stock last week and did a good business.

Heinl, Patten, Suder, and, in fact, every dealer enjoyed a good business during the week. H. L. S.

ket has been more overcrowded. Since Lent began the retail trade has suffered more than in any previous year in the cut flower line. Among the downtown florists, they claim that transient trade is good, but the prices are too low. Their window displays are very attractive. The uptown florists say that plants sell better than cut flowers and their window displays are mostly made up of plants.

The four wholesale houses had their hands full all of the last week handling their consignments. Everyone was loaded down with everything in season. All stock coming in is of the best quality and the fancies are sold for what common grades brought only a few weeks ago. To quote prices is impossible, as the retailer has his own way when it comes to making the price. A betterment of conditions is hardly possible until Easter, which is yet a month away.

Club Meeting.

The meeting of the Florists' Club, March 12, was attended by twenty members. Vice-president George Angermueller occupied the chair.

This was the yearly rose show meeting, but, owing to the spring exhibition on the same day, the only exhibitors were J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, and E. W. Guy, of Belleville. The exhibits were judged by Messrs. Dunford, Fillmore and Halstead, who highly commended Mr. Ammann for Chatenay, Ivory, Moulton, Richmond and Maid;

Mr. Guy for a magnificent vase of Ivory. The committee on pottery reported progress and stated that the subscription lists, at any of the wholesale houses, will be open until May 14.

The trustees reported having engaged Bowman's hall, at Eleventh and Locust streets, for future meetings.

The question of holding a flower show this fall will be taken up at the meeting Thursday afternoon, April 9.

Spring Flower Show.

The second annual spring flower show by the St. Louis Horticultural Society opened March 10 and continued three days. The exhibition was given in the large banquet room in the Masonic Temple, the hall being well filled with fine stock.

The cut blooms of roses, carnations, violets and bulbous stock were exceptionally good. In made-up work the only prizes were for baskets and the only exhibitor was Fred H. Weber, who had three baskets. Some splendid exhibits were made, not for competition. These were by Fred C. Weber, whose work was a special attraction; Theo. Miller and Chas. Beyer.

George A. Kuhl, Pekin, and Vaughan's Greenhouses, Western Springs, Ill., made plant exhibits. C. C. Sanders, H. Weber & Sons and Emil Rotenhoefer made attractive displays of nursery stock.

Peter Reinberg's roses came a day late for competition, but were staged by the management and added greatly to the show. J. F. Ammann's roses attracted the rose growers, all being fine, especially the Alice Roosevelt and Rhea Reid.

The attendance is reported satisfactory, but of course was not so large as last year, when the public was admitted free.

The judges were Robert F. Tesson, Alex Waldbart and A. Meyer, Sr. The awards follow:

Collection of bulbous plants, Wm. Schray & Sons first, Koenig Floral Co. second, George B. Windler third.

Fifty foliage and blooming plants, Schray & Sons first, C. Young & Sons Co. second, Koenig Floral Co. third.

Ten geraniums in bloom, Koenig Floral Co. first.

of last week, although at a low figure. The fakers are out in full force, more than were ever seen on the streets of this city before. These will, of course, go with the present large carnation crop. Many thousands of carnations were sold to fakers at $5 per thousand. These in turn were retailed, or rather resold, at 15 cents per dozen or two dozen for a quarter.

St. Patrick's day created a good demand for white carnations. The market price on these was 3 cents for white and 4 cents for colored. This price was only for a few days.

Roses have just been equal to the demand until the last week. Now these are becoming more plentiful.

There is plenty of asparagus and smilax for all.

Various Notes.

Louis Charvat, who was with the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange for years, has given up his position, owing to ill health. He will hereafter be found at Rowena street, where he and his father will conduct a retail business.

Chas. R. Tuson, of Windsor, Ont., is the star curler in this vicinity. He and his rink of curlers cleaned up everything in Windsor. A valuable tie-pin was his share of the prizes. Mr. Tuson was seen at Beard Bros.' last week, laying in a supply for Easter.

F. J. Rosser disposed of a large number of well done cyclamen to several of the downtown stores this season.

Beard Bros.' place is no exception to the general rule at present. The carnation houses are one mass of flowers and buds. A fine lot of Bostons and Whitmani also promise good returns this spring.

Henceforth the San Jose scale and other tree exterminators will be kept under the eagle eye of three tree inspectors. The mayor signed papers to this effect last week. This is a step in the right direction and, no doubt, was brought about by our able park commissioner.

Henry Fruck will leave the first part of June for a three or four months' stay at the baths in Carlsbad, Germany. His health has not been of the best for the last year and it is to be hoped that he will benefit by this rest.

William Hielscher is confined to his home at present. He has been ailing for some time.

Otto, a brother of Louis Charvat, is the latest acquisition at the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange.

The florists will be pleased to hear that Mrs. Robert Watson's health is improving.

Mr. Pierce, of Pontiac, Mich., has been in St. Paul, Minn., attending the funeral of his father.

Among many other orders last week, Schroeter's made a complete casket cover of La Detroit roses. This fine rose is certainly well adapted for this purpose.

William Waltz is on the recorder's court jury.

BOSTON.

The Market.

There is little new that can be said about the condition of flower trade. Quietness still reigns, but the anticipated heavy Lenten slump has not yet arrived, nor are we likely to see it. While big social functions are suspended, quite a few dinner parties, weddings and other events calling for decorative material are taking place. These, added to funeral orders, keep the market from going hopelessly to the bad. Roses are now abundant and show a drooping tendency. The demand for Beauties is not active, many people now preferring Richmonds and Killarneys, and the best grades of the two latter varieties bring excellent prices. Brides and Maids are cheaper and many are now offered by the street fakery at three for a nickel.

Carnations continue in oversupply. The demand for green blooms for March 17 caused a run on whites, which temporarily gave them a mild boom. White stocks and other emerald dyed flowers have also been in evidence. Surely this coloring process should be discouraged by florists. It cannot be said to elevate the profession. Violets are in abundant supply, but singles are falling off and getting smaller with the warmer weather. Bulbous stock of all kinds is of excellent quality, but is not selling as it should, prices being low. Sweet peas are excellent and sell as well as any flowers. There are good supplies of antirrhinums, anemones, ranunculus, wall-flowers, primroses, mignonette, pansies, marguerites, ixias, tritonias and other seasonable stock.

Club Meeting.

About 175 members attended the meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club March 17, to listen to the practical lecture by Eber Holmes on "Indoor Commercial Rose Culture." William H. Elliott had written out the points he wished to make and both speakers were given a rising vote of thanks. Messrs. Wheeler, Downs, Finlayson, Palmer, Cameron, Kennedy and others joined in the discussion.

While exhibits were less numerous than on carnation night, there were some interesting ones. The coming of the spring show three days later reduced their numbers. W. H. Elliott showed splendid Richmond and Killarney. Mr. Holmes had Bride, Maid and Richmond. R. T. McGorum brought Morgan, Bride and Maid. Wm. Sim showed Boston and Princess of Wales violets and sweet peas. H. F. Woods had a new seedling single violet. H. F. Calder showed double violets. T. H. Westwood had cannas and Begonia gracilis. W. W. Rawson & Co. exhibited Anemusa Dropmore. Joseph Fuller had a double lobelia and Samuel Neil showed callas.

Three new members were elected. The annual banquet for April 1 was boomed and there was an active demand for tickets for it.

Wm. Sim will lecture on sweet peas at the April meeting.

Various Notes.

There were more growers of sham-rocks than usual for March 17 this year. In addition to L. Cousins, W. Nicholson and S. J. Goddard, quite a few others entered the field and many thousands were disposed of. Small pans seemed to take well at the stores. The fakery did quite a business in dyed flowers. Many of the stores also handled doctored carnations.

The New England Nurseries anticipate a lively spring trade and, from orders already received, find but little indication of any decline in the demand for choice nursery stock.

Professor H. S. Jackson, of Newark, Del., was the lecturer before an interested audience in Horticultural hall March 14, his subject being, "The Development of Disease-resisting Plants and Flowers." Owing to the spring show taking place March 21, there will be no lecture on that day.

The Bay State Nurseries report business up to date as considerably ahead of 1906, but not quite so good as that of 1907. However, there appears to be more new business coming than a year ago and prospects are good.

W. W. Rawson entertained 120 members of the Boston Market Gardeners' Association at his Arlington home March 14. The farm buildings and numerous greenhouses were inspected, the lettuce crops being of grand quality. After dinner J. B. Shurtleff spoke on "Farming in California," and Professor H. F. Thompson, of Amherst, read a paper on "Manure as a Fertilizer and Its Effects on Market Gardening."

All indications are for a splendid

MRS. JARDINE

A FREE, STRONG GROWTH, WITH GOOD FOLIAGE. A VARIETY THAT CAN BE EASILY GROWN. LARGE FLOWERS ON LONG STEMS. DELICIOUS FRAGRANCE. DISTINCT, PLEASING COLOR THAT WILL SELL AT SIGHT. A ROSE THAT WILL HOLD ITS COLOR IN THE DULL DAYS OF DECEMBER AND JANUARY.

MRS. JARDINE has all these characteristics, and, in addition, is of so perfect a form that it can be used either in the bud or half expanded flower. The color is a bright rosy pink, shading in the outer petals to salmon pink, and, even in January, when Bridesmaids and Killarney lose their color, Mrs. Jardine is as bright as in October or March.

We extend a cordial invitation to everyone interested in this New Rose to visit our Nurseries and see it growing.

MRS. JARDINE has been awarded Two Silver Medals, numerous Certificates, and successfully stood the best test which any novelty can possibly have in passing unanimously, in December, the Award Committee of the New York Florists' Club after an exhaustive examination of the growing plants, with a score of 92 points.

spring flower show at Horticultural hall this week. The exhibition opens on Friday, March 20, and closes on Monday, March 23. The running over to Monday, instead of closing on Sunday, is an experiment.

March weather so far has been unusually genial. Plowing and sowing of early seeds have been accomplished earlier than usual. As a general thing, a warm March is followed by a cold April. Such was the case in 1903.

Seed stores report great activity with the advent of warmer weather and have more mail orders and counter trade than they can handle. W. N. CRAIG.

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

The Market.

Trade here has been a little slack to what it has been for the last few weeks. Carnations have been plentiful, but not many to go to the barrel. Bulbous stock is still a drag and there is not much prospect of catching up to the output. It looks as though every one has overdone the bulb end this season, and it is a question whether another season will see so much of it grown. Roses are good at this time, with a shortage of Richmond. Funeral work has not been nearly so heavy as the last few weeks, which has made it hard to use up certain lines of stock. St. Patrick's day was a model day and large quantities of green carnations were handled by all the dealers, especially the store men.

Various Notes.

The Florists' Club held its meeting at E. Metzmaier's Tuesday evening, March 10, and after the meeting was treated to a fine supper, which was served in elegant style, and every one present did justice to the spread.

The bowlers got together again Friday night. The boys are improving right along. The high score was made by A. Hills with 209, and the others averaged good counts.

Frank Queke, a member of our club, left Saturday night on a trip to his old home in Germany and will be gone for several weeks.

Mr. Gibson, florist with the Livingston Seed Co., has been confined in the hospital, undergoing an operation, but hopes to be around soon again.

C. A. Roth reports business good, with lots of funeral work.

The Fifth Avenue Floral Co. is still cutting lots of carnations, but the heaviest crop is off. They are busy here getting ready on spring plants for bedding, as they have a big run on that line of work.

E. Metzmaier reports good business and is busy on plants for market.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The unusually warm, spring-like weather of the last week has brought in an immense stock of flowers of all kinds, the largest stock, in fact, that this city has ever seen at this or perhaps at any other season of the year. The natural result is that the purchasing power of a dollar has been enormously increased, flowers of all kinds being extraordinarily cheap. There are possibly a few exceptions to this general rule, but they are so few that you can count them on the fingers of one hand.

It really seems that every Beauty grower around the city is on crop today and the price continues to fall. The quality is superb. The missing grade of extras has now been supplied, if not by natural means, at least with the assistance of the shears.

Other roses have fallen in price. There is a vast difference between lots of twenty-five and lots of 100, though of course the former are selected with especial care. The poorer grades go begging; even the fakers are a little chary of them when they can get fine stock every now and then when left over.

Carnations continue plentiful; the prices are extremely low, white being better value than any other color, due partly to funeral work, and partly to St. Patrick's day, quite a lot being green in honor of the Irish saint.

Violets are fairly good stock. While the price is low, they do not seem to have increased in proportion to other flowers. Sweet peas are less in demand than a week ago. Cattleyas are more plentiful and fine. Harrisii lilies are now of excellent quality and fairly abundant. Callas are so largely in excess of the demand that it is almost impossible to sell them at any figure. Southern daffodils have arrived, the first shipments being only of moderate quality. There is a fair demand at low prices for good daffodils and tulips. The latter have been reinforced by Murillo, the best double white. Choice Acacia pubescens is still to be had, and there is an increase in the production of gardenias. Arbutus has made its appearance and is eagerly welcomed by the buyers.

Riverton.

Three people met at the well-appointed office of Henry A. Dreer, Inc., to talk about matters of interest and look over the stock. They were George A. Strohelein, who has almost as many friends on the other side of the water as he has on this side; James C. Clark, who can tell you as many interesting things about Oyster Bay as Theodore Roosevelt himself, and Phil, who is eager to hear and see everything that may be of general interest. On the tour a halt was made in the packing-shed to look over the benches filled with orders to go out to all points of the country. There were kentias for the decorator, Eucharis Amazonica for the florist who forces his own flowers for retailing, Helleborus niger for the far north, where some nurserymen propose to test its hardiness, and many others. It is interesting, by the way, to note that Mr. Clark has seen long beds of the Christmas rose planted outdoors in frames, sections sash-covered, at a time so as to produce a continuous lot of blooms from November to Christmas. While I cannot recall the latitude in which this was done, my impression is that it was not far south of here.

Mr. Clark believes that the limit of public endurance has been reached in the matter of new types of Boston fern and that unless the introducer of a new type has something far and away superior to anything now in sight, it will become increasingly difficult for him to obtain fancy prices for his introduction. Curiously enough, the older types, the original Boston and the Scott fern, maintain their places at the top of the list. The Whitman kind is also in the vanguard, but many others have been dropped, simply because it is impossible to carry a large enough stock of each to catalogue them all. There are two or three promising new varieties on trial, notably one of Pierson's, one of Barrows' and one of their own. Each has good points and will be given a thorough test before their fate is decided.

Cibotium Schiedeii holds its own, the sizes indicating the demand to be fully equal to the supply. It must also be said that the demand for the various types of Boston, in what might be termed the domestic sizes, is also fully equal to the supply and in some cases a little ahead of it; many benches were filled with stock plants planted out for runners. The progress made in the growth of the Boston type of fern has slightly restricted the smaller varieties grown for ferneries, chiefly of the pteris family. Still, there were immense quantities of pteris and other low-growing ferns of the hardier kinds in splendid condition. These will be followed by an immense stock of small plants pricked out into boxes, while these in turn will be followed by another immense lot of fern spores just showing signs of germination.

The dahlias are well under way for the coming season. Something like 60,000 are in the cutting bed, while another immense crop of tops is coming up from the roots in a house nearby, indicating that Locust Farm and outlying districts will be as strong on dahlias as ever this season. Another house full of interest was occupied by hardy perennials set out in boxes ready to transfer to the frames in a month.

Time forbade a more extensive view of the Riverton range, the remaining minutes being spent in a flying trip to look at the new daisy, Blush Queen Alexandra, of which the Dreer Co. has secured practically the entire stock. This is similar to Queen Alexandra, with the exception that the flowers are an Enchantress shade of pink instead of white. Mr. Strohleln thought more flowers came double than in the older daisy, and that the growth of the two plants was identical.

J. J. Karins appeared about this time. He returned from the Pacific slope or thereabout the day before and left for another extended trip the day after. But in his company a visit was paid to the Cocos Weddelliana range, which Mr. Karins assured me could not be duplicated on this side of the Atlantic, if in the world. It was certainly a sight worth seeing, the plants being in all sizes up to the beautiful specimens in 7-inch pots, a size never grown heretofore in Riverton. Mr. Strohleln stated that Phoenix Roebelenii has proved to be a palm of commercial value, the experimental stage being past. An immense quantity of seed of this variety is now germinating, while the larger sizes are well represented.

Various Notes.

Edmund A. Harvey, of Brandywine Summit, in speaking of the short crops of mushrooms throughout Chester county early in the season, said that the growers believed this might be due to the wet condition of the manure when brought into the mushroom beds in the fall.

Stephen Mortensen, of Southampton, has probably the finest lot of Brides and Maids around Philadelphia today. His plants are of enormous size, full of flowers and in splendid condition. The buds, while not of exhibition size, are fine

ANNUALS AND BIENNIALS.

Robert Cameron, superintendent of Harvard Botanic Garden, delivered a lecture before the Massachusetts Horticultural Society. His subject was "Annuals and Biennials," and he said, in the beginning:

From a horticultural standpoint an annual is a showy flowering plant which lives but one season, and, consequently, requires to be raised from seed each year.

A biennial is a showy flowering plant which is produced from seed in one year, and blooms, ripens its seed and dies the year following.

These definitions do not always hold good, as there are some annuals that can be kept longer than one year, if they are restrained from flowering and fruiting.

Annual plants give more pleasure to a larger number of persons, are less expensive, easier to grow, and give quicker results than any other plants that are grown in our gardens. They are so cheap that there is no excuse for the poorest people in our thickly settled districts to be without plants.

No doubt some of you have wondered, as I have, why nature gave such a short period of time to these plants to complete the cycle of life, while to others she has given an almost indefinite time to live. Why are they so short-lived and have they been always annuals? These are puzzling questions and little has been written about them.

We are told by scientists that flowering plants have come to us from a remote period, from the higher cryptogam, such as selaginellas and lycopodiums; that the gymnosperms such as the coniferæ and cycadaceæ were probably the first plants to produce seeds; then probably came the woody trees and shrubs and after that the herbaceous plants, and no doubt after these came the annuals and biennials.

To answer the question as to why they are so short lived: It probably came about in this way: At one time, where these plants were growing they were about to be driven out of existence by some agents—probably by cold in cold climates and by drought and heat in dry and hot climates. When a plant's life is in danger it always tries to reproduce itself. Therefore these plants under those hard conditions flowered early and produced an abundance of seeds which carried them through the trying seasons and they were able to again reproduce themselves when congenial conditions prevailed. Doing this same thing for many years, they inherited this mode of reproducing themselves annually from seed, and were saved in this way from extinction. This change did not take place all at once, but required a long period of time. The whole question is one of environment and inheritance.

From a horticultural standpoint this shortness of life is not such a drawback as some people imagine it is; the fragile flowers and transient beauty of the annuals make them all the dearer to those who love a touch of sentiment in their gardens.

The real merits of annual plants are sufficiently great to render needless any exaggerated statement of their claims. We are well aware that to many the hardy perennials offer superior attractions, and the lovers of these plants are always sure to lay emphasis on the great trouble of sowing annuals each year. However, the true lover of garden beauty will hardly attempt to estimate by any nice process the comparative merits of the various classes of ornamental plants, but on the other hand, should be sincerely thankful for the bountiful supply which has been given him to embellish his surroundings. They possess many advantages, strong points in their favor being the short time required to produce an effect and the small cost at which a display of flowers may be maintained from early summer until late in the fall; they are especially easy to grow and their value for cutting cannot be overlooked. One merit which they possess and which is not thought about, is that they do not take up room in winter; consequently they are ideal plants for those having limited space.

With a good knowledge of the various species and varieties there is no kind of ornamental gardening in the way of borders or beds that cannot, if necessary, be done with annuals, just as well as with other plants. Many of the failures which have existed with these plants have come about through not knowing the proper kinds to use; to attain results one must know which are best suited for the effects that are desired.

THE PARIS FLOWER TRADE.

The flower trade of Paris is one of the largest of its kind in the world, owing to the wealth of floral decoration employed by the French people. According to Le Jardin, more than 200,000 flowering plants daily arrive at the City market, and this is exclusive of the enormous supplies of cut flowers. The plants are grown partly on the outskirts of Paris itself, and partly in the surrounding country districts. Some 200 growers, who altogether occupy about 150 hectares (370 acres) of ground, of which one-third is under glass, send the whole of their produce, to the annual value of about $1,000,000, into the city. This is exclusive of the forced lilacs from Vitry, and the roses from La Brie, which account for another $300,000. Other towns contribute cut flowers to about the same value. In addition, some 30,000,000 plants in pots are annually received from these sources, besides the large quantities of camellias, roses, azaleas, etc., which arrive from more remote districts. An immense number of bulbs, orchids and other exotics are also imported from foreign countries, swelling the sales to a huge total.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., George S. Green, Chicago; First Vice-pres., M. H. Duryea, New York; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. Twenty-sixth annual convention at Hotel Pontchartrain, Detroit, Mich., June 23 to 25, 1908.

THE seed advertising is light in the general magazines, but it is heavier than ever in the farm papers of the better class.

THE pea and bean growing business of the Bromfield-Colvin Ries Co., Bay City, Mich., is now conducted by Bromfield & Colvin.

SEED of the late sweet corns, and the popular varieties of the field sorts are showing up better and enough of a supply will likely develop.

THE California solicitors for future trade are said to look happy as they appear, but it is also said by some that business does not warrant the happy appearance.

IN spite of reports of a more or less unsatisfactory season by some wholesale seedsmen in England, Watkins & Simpson say they have had a decidedly busy time the last three months.

THE building which was owned and occupied by the defunct Thompson Seed Co., on South Broadway, Albert Lea, Minn., was purchased recently by the G. A. Olson Mfg. Co. for $4,000.

THE St. Louis Seed Co., St. Louis, Mo., reports mail trade up to the best records for the middle of March. Under the direction of Walter Retzer the business done with florists is being largely increased this year.

WHOLESALE seedsmen in England were offering, as late as March 1, stocks of some of the best and newest varieties of sweet peas, although the sale for sweet pea seeds this year is reported to have been unusually heavy.

JAMES VICK'S SONS, Rochester, send out a large mailing card, offering "Vick's vegetable collections," and with one corner perforated to be torn off and become a smaller post card, requesting a copy of Vick's general catalogue.

A PURE yellow sweet pea will bring a golden harvest to the "creator," or as likely to the discoverer.

VISITED CHICAGO: H. L. Tawzer, treasurer of B. F. Adams Co., Peoria, Ill.; E. E. Stewart, gladiolus grower, Rives Junction, Mich.

THE Hollanders now in this country have received advices from home that the bulb fields have come through the winter in good shape.

ONE of the Holland bulb travelers remarks that at any rate railroad fares have been reduced to 2 cents a mile in many of the states since last season.

KENTIA seeds are not as high in London as might be expected from the fact that kentia plants of useful size are good property the world over. Recent shipments from Australia were offered at as little as 10 shillings per thousand in large lots and 12 shillings per single thousand for Belmoreana; Forsteriana brought a little higher figure.

AT Brawley, Cal., Peter D. Frederick is experimenting at starting cantaloupes early under a muslin protection. The cantaloupes are planted in the usual manner, so far as hilling and spacing are concerned, but over each hill there is stretched a canopy of muslin about the size of a man's handkerchief. Two arched wires are used, crossed over the melon hill somewhat like the center wicket in a croquet ground. The ends of these wires are sewed to the corners of the muslin squares, and the wires are then thrust firmly into the ground, so as to secure the canopies and prevent the wind blowing them away.

MORSE'S SPENCER PEA.

A sweet pea authority writing in an English trade paper says: "A novelty that ought to have been pushed in this country is Florence Morse Spencer. So far as I am aware, only one retailer has offered it. There is every likelihood of it proving a real good thing, and it will, I fancy, prove a menace to that fine variety Elsie Herbert. Whether it will prove to be the same is a moot point, but if Morse's color plate is typical, then the variety has a more defined pink edge than Elsie Herbert. Comparisons of the seed do not make Elsie Herbert show up very well. The Californian variety, both from appearance and germinative power, is a long way ahead, and I shall watch its doings with interest."

EMERGENCY IN IOWA.

There are a great many respects in which this is an unusual season for the seed trade, but, so far as heard from, only one house has faced the contingency thrust upon the Iowa Seed Co., of Des Moines. Business is on the boom in the west to such an extent that the regular edition of the catalogue became exhausted early in March and an emergency edition was issued. The emergency catalogue was without cover, but contained thirty-two pages in which were listed in condensed form nearly all the items which were in the larger book. It was a neat job typographically, and on the front page in red ink carried the following "special notice":

In December we published a large catalogue having beautifully lithographed cover in seven colors, handsome colored plates and hundreds of illustrations. These were mailed to our regular customers in all parts of the country, and about 100,000 were saved for new inquiries. The call for them has been marvelous, and the entire edition was soon exhausted. It takes a long time to print such a book, and the season would be over before we could get another edition out. We are therefore obliged to send you this condensed catalogue. It contains an abridged list of our best varieties of vegetable, flower and farm seeds, flower plants, bulbs, nursery stock, etc., and also some special offers on the back cover. Please examine this list carefully and send us at least a trial order. This will insure your receiving a copy of the large illustrated catalogue for 1909, which we expect to make especially attractive.

gladiolus society, as Mr. Cowee suggests, for I suppose such a society would regulate the naming of new varieties, and to a considerable extent stop the renaming of others. This renaming practice is the cause of much complaint of late, there being several instances where a variety under two names has proved to be identical, or so nearly identical that even experts do not agree on points of difference. I received recently a letter from a well-known Boston seed firm urging gladiolus authorities to come together and decide this matter, so that they would not be judged in the wrong light, as two of their leading novelties in gladioli of this year's catalogue are at present the subject of much discussion.

VEGETABLE BREEDING.

Continuing the subject of the improvement of vegetables by selection and by cross breeding, as begun in the REVIEW of March 5, W. Van Fleet said:

Celery.

Celery appears to be wholly a product of evolution by selection. The present tendencies on one hand are to breed for early maturity and quick bleaching, and on the other to seek in the deep-green leaved varieties good keeping quality and resistance to bacterial disease.

Cucumbers and Melons.

Intentional as well as natural crossing plays an important part in the development of cucumbers and melons. Most strains of forcing or glasshouse cucumbers are the results of crossing our White Spine variety with the long, smooth cucumbers so extensively grown abroad. In these dilute variety hybrids the White Spine type of fruit prevails, but the vigor of plant of the European kinds is retained. Glasshouse melons appear to an even greater extent to be the direct results of crossing. In most instances records of parentage are preserved, as being of commercial importance. Among outdoor varieties hand-made crosses are less in evidence, the seed grower practicing careful selection and isolation of

THE TREE BABY RAMBLER—Grown as a Standard

The popularity of the Baby Rambler has suggested the growing of it as a tree or standard. The variety is too well known for description; enough to say, it retains all its characteristics of free-blooming qualities, etc. 35c each; $3.50 per doz.; $25.00 per 100.

This variety has created quite a sensation when exhibited at the English National Rose Society's and other shows. "Baby Dorothy," when planted out, flowers perpetually from spring until autumn. It makes an excellent pot plant for forcing. Price for strong, field-grown plants, 50c each; $2.00 for bundle of 5; $35.00 per 100.

Mrs. Wm. H. Cutbush. A grand acquisition to the Baby Ram-

HYBRID TEA, or EVERBLOOMING ROSES

Hybrid Tea, or Everblooming Roses, are becoming more popular every year. As hardy as the perpetuals, with slight protection in winter, they give a wealth of bloom all through the summer months and late in the fall till frost checks them.

The Grand New Rose Lyon. Originated by the raiser of Etoile de France. Perpetual flowering. Vigorous grower. The blooms are very large with broad petals, full and globular in form; shrimp-pink at the ends of the petals, center coral-red or salmon-pink shaded with chrome-yellow. Very fragrant. $1.25 each; $6.00 for bundle of 5; $12.00 for 10.

Rose, Etoile de France. Flower large, possessing petals of very good substance; magnificent cupped form. Superb crimson-red velvet, the center of the bloom vivid cerise-red. The flowers are very fragrant and last very long. The Queen of the Everblooming Red Roses. The most free-blooming and vigorous Red Rose ever introduced. Strong, 2-year-old plants, field-grown, 25c each; $1.00 for bundle of 5; $18.00 per 100.

The Killarney Rose. This is a grand rose for either indoor or outdoor cultivation; is a strong grower, and the blooms, which are of a beautiful pink, are borne in great profusion. Strong, 2-year-old field-grown stock, 25c each; $1.00 for bundle of 5; $18.00 per 100.

Gruss an Teplitz. No Rose in commerce can compare with Gruss an Teplitz as a bedder. It is a perfect sheet of richest crimson-scarlet all summer. A strong, vigorous grower. Hardy. 20c each; $1.50 for 10; $12.00 for 100.

Maman Cochet Roses. The best of all Roses for summer flowering and cutting.

Pink—Color a clear, rich pink changing to silvery rose; very double and fragrant.

of selection will usually fix a desirable cross sufficiently for dissemination. Many successful crosses have been made for purely local uses. By far the greatest interest in corn breeding lies in the vast efforts being made by experiment stations, societies and individuals to increase productiveness and develop special characteristics in field corn varieties.

Lettuce.

Lettuce has hitherto been developed by selection and wonderful variations have been produced. The United States Department of Agriculture, however, announces that a successful cross has been made between the loose-leaved Grand Rapids type and a large heading variety, like Big Boston, probably the first intentional cross-breeding achieved in this important salad vegetable.

Onions.

The onion is one of the most ancient and widely dispersed of aromatic vegetables. Various species of allium are cultivated in different parts of the world and it would appear that fair opportunities for methodical hybridization exist. Attempts to intercross varieties of A. cepa, the garden onion, with A. Porrum, the leek, and A. fistulosum, the Welsh onion, in the hands of the writer, completely failed. The crossing of Prize-taker, a large Mediterranean variety of garden onions, with Red Wethersfield, resulted in attractive intermediate offspring that reproduced quite true from seed.

Peas and Beans.

Peas and beans are constantly subject to the most careful selection; yet a considerable number of the most prized varieties, especially among peas, are products of intentional crossing. Beans are rather difficult subjects to artificially pollinate; yet successful hybrids between the lima and garden pole bean, belonging to fairly diverse species, have been made by more than one breeder. Investigations show that these garden legumes, while popularly supposed to be self-pollinating, as the anthers mature in the bud, are quite subject to natural crossing by the agency of minute pollen-bearing insects that enter immature blooms.

PACIFIC COAST.

VANCOUVER, WASH.—Albert Greer, who has been employed for two years by a vegetable grower here, has now purchased a place and will soon begin business on his own account.

SALEM, ORE.—Carl F. Ruef has begun the erection of two additional greenhouses, 20x100 and 30x100, besides a propagating house, 6x100. He is also planning to make numerous changes, among which will be the devoting of two of his houses exclusively to carnations.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Beautiful, sunshiny weather is in evidence at this writing and California has had a taste of several weeks of spring. With the continued warmth the crop of flowers is becoming larger every day and florists can better satisfy their whims if they are at all particular in the kinds of stock they wish to purchase. For the last three months, although business has not been anything to brag of, the retailers have had to take almost anything that the growers wished to give them, but there is quite a change now and the store men can be as particular as they wish and still the growers appear to act as if they would like to sell their stocks.

Roses have had a decided slump in the last three days and the best whites and Maids can now be had at 50 cents per dozen. Lent is partially to blame for this, but behind it all is the favorable weather following in the wake of several months of cloudy days. With carnations there are very similar conditions. Enchantress can be had in any quantity at $3 per hundred and other varieties in proportion.

Daffodils and narcissi are getting scarcer and the prices have stiffened slightly. Fruit blossoms are being used in large quantities for decorative work and have largely taken the place of the other kinds of greens. Valley is plentiful and moves slowly. Dutch hyacinths and tulips are not very popular, apparently, with the flower buyers, and several growers have announced their intention of cutting them off the list for another season. Daffodils have been the best sellers, all things considered. A few outside sweet peas are seen and they are costing the retailers $1 per dozen bunches.

Violets are still in their prime and take up the bulk of the flower trade, both on the streets and in the stores. Easter lilies, owing to the favorable conditions, are coming on much faster than usual this season and several large batches will be in full bloom in a few days. The growers are asking from $1.50 to $2 per dozen for them.

Business is quiet, both in San Francisco and Oakland, with no immediate prospects of a betterment much before Easter.

Various Notes.

A. Ringier, of the W. W. Barnard Co., Chicago, has made several trips to the interior towns of the state. He reports trade conditions good, with heavy demands for some lines of stock.

The Pacific Fertilizing Co., of 612 Seventh street, is head over heels trying to keep up with its orders for bone

The Market.

These are the days when it is a common thing to hear complaints from merchants engaged in various lines of business, but not so from the florists. We have not experienced a really dull day for a month, and to quote a remark from one of the fraternity, "Everything goes." An unusually large death rate has created a big demand for funeral work, as gradually the old pioneers are passing to the great beyond. Good prices have been realized, too, for a high order of work. Social events have given us the opportunity to show our skill in a decorative way and counter trade never was better. In the cut flower market roses are still scarce, while carnations, responding to the early spring sunshine, are more plentiful and as fine as we ever saw them. Violets are a feast and were never more popular. The air is rich with their fragrance. The window attractions are extremely neat and seasonable, with bulbous stock, daffodils and lily of the valley filling a prominent place. The superlative excellence of the single daffodil is worthy of note, grown on 18-inch stems, with blooms the size of an after-dinner coffee cup.

Various Notes.

In an interview with the proprietor of the Sibson Rose Nurseries, we learned that the sales on hardy roses are five times as large as in former years. Besides issuing a catalogue, Mr. Sibson extensively advertises this branch of his business in the local papers. He also stated that the roses under glass had not produced such good results in the last few weeks as he had hoped, but a great crop was in sight for April and the Easter trade.

Peter Johnson is having great success with his carnations and surprises everybody by the large number he cuts from so limited a space. He has just added another house for miscellaneous stock.

Two years ago Joseph W. Huserik, a wire frame manufacturer, came north to locate, and being a far-sighted man, dropped anchor in Portland. Close and prompt attention to every detail has earned for Mr. Huserik a splendid patronage.

Max Smith, who opened a neat little store on Fifth street a year ago, informs us that trade has been extremely good with him. Mr. Smith is also a successful grower, owning several thousand feet of glass at Twenty-eighth street and Sandy road.

The robins, pussy-willows and crocuses, harbingers of spring, have made their appearance after a brief sojourn of the March lion.

Vegetable Forcing.

THE numerous growers of leaf lettuce north of Chicago are feeling more cheerful; the price of their product has advanced materially in the last few days.

METHODS OF CULTURE.

I wish to give to such readers as B. J. P., whose inquiry appeared in the REVIEW of February 20, page 28, the benefit of nearly thirty years' experience in growing some of the plants which he wishes to grow.

Tomatoes, in my latitude (Oklahoma), I always sow about February 15, in a bed with a temperature of 75 or even 80 degrees. They nearly always come up in four or five days. I sow them fairly thick, in rows six inches apart. If too thick I thin down so as to permit air and light. After they are about three or four inches high I spot out in a coldframe 5x5 inches apart, with three or four inches of manure in the bottom and two inches of sandy soil on top. After they have grown so as to nearly cover the ground, I take a hoe and straighten it out with the handle, and cut each plant out by itself. By this means you may lift four on a shovel at one time without disturbing or breaking the roots. Each plant can be separated the same way, by using a piece of shingle about four inches wide to lift them from the wagon and put them where wanted to grow. Cabbage I sow a few days later, but try not to have so much heat, as they do not require it. I sow the same as tomatoes, thinning out if required for stocky plants. I tie in bundles of 100, wrapped in damp moss or newspapers.

Eggplants and peppers require more heat to germinate, so I run my house at about 90 degrees until they are up, when I reduce the temperature to about 65 degrees. The tomatoes, eggplants, peppers and cabbage will all do well now in the same temperature.

Now, in regard to sweet potatoes, if Mr. Scott's method were followed it would require a good deal of capital to raise sweet potato sprouts for commercial purposes and naturally they would be very expensive to the buyer. Here is my way: Take plenty of fresh stable manure and get it quite hot in the usual

FLORISTS have a splendid opportunity of raising Mushrooms by utilizing the waste space under the benches, and then utilizing the waste material of expended mushroom beds in growing flowers. Lambert's Pure Culture MUSHROOM way. Put it in about two feet thick, and cover with three inches of soil. Test the heat, and do not let it go over 80 degrees, as then your seed might rot. Now put your potatoes down and let there be room for your finger between them. Cover with two inches and a half of good soil. After they are well up, give plenty of light and air. If intended for shipping, tie the offsets in bundles the same as cabbage; if not, simply pull them up, being careful not to pull the tubers up, as they will sprout again. I sometimes pull from the same bed three times. This way will save the expense of pots. I would not like the idea of potting about 30,000 sweet potatoes every year. The method that I have described is the New Jersey way, only that New Jersey people use fire instead of manure beds.

FORCING RHUBARB.

Rhubarb forcing has become an industry of considerable importance. In some cases rough houses with sash are built over the plants in the field. The sashes are kept darkened and steam or other heat applied. One large forcer in the east uses long sheds, planting the roots thickly in large batches. Light is excluded. Steam pipes are used and a night temperature of 58 to 60 degrees maintained. Very good results are secured here. Where only a small quantity is forced, any dark cellar or shed will answer very well, and any place which will answer for the forcing of mushrooms and chicory will do equally well for rhubarb, provided the necessary head room is given.

Forced rhubarb is red in color. The darkness tends to diminish leaf growth and elongate the stalks. If wanted quickly, rhubarb can be forced in as high a temperature as 75 degrees at night, but the cooler it is grown, the larger will be the crop. In lifting clumps for forcing, care should be taken not to break the roots. They should be well frozen before being housed and soil must be packed about them to prevent any shriveling. Roots which are forced are, of course, worthless for planting again. If covered and forced where they are grown in the field, the roots will recuperate in a couple of seasons. Roots for forcing should not be less than four years old, if from seed. Our experience of seedlings has been that a large proportion are valueless; divided plants are far preferable. Victoria is probably the best forcing rhubarb. Linnæus is also good. W.

WINNIPEG, MAN.

The Florists' Association.

The florists of Winnipeg, after several meetings held at the Royal Greenhouses, on Notre Dame avenue and Princess street, have formed an association whose aim is to further trade interests and to promote social intercourse among its members.

It was decided the name should be "The Winnipeg Florists' Association," and the officers elected were: President, Mr. Burchart; vice-presidents, Mr. Stolper and Mr. Akins; secretary, Mr. Birch; treasurer, Miss Siddle; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Kempster; committee, Messrs. Antenbring, Lloyd and Riddle.

The general meeting, held at the Royal Greenhouses February 27, was a huge success. The first part of the evening was devoted to the business of the association, followed by a pleasant social hour. Light refreshments were provided by Mr. Stolper.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYMEN.

Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Vice-Pres., O. M. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; Sec'y, Geo. O. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., O. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The 33d annual convention will be held at Milwaukee, June, 1908.

THE nursery catalogues were out, as a rule, earlier than usual this year and a good run of orders is reported.

B. F. VANDERVOORT, an old nurseryman, has bought six acres of land at Normal, Ill., and is building packing sheds preparatory to starting a nursery.

THE nursery business is as good as ever it was, what little falling off is noted in certain localities being fully made up for by gains in the farming communities and in landscaping.

THE Elm City Nursery Co., New Haven, Conn., mailed its 1908 catalogue only to customers who have been heard from in the last three years, and the general custom is to distribute the books less promiscuously than heretofore.

W. W. HUNT & Co., proprietors of the Blue Hills Nurseries, Hartford, Conn., have issued an enlarged catalogue this season, thirty-two pages being given to hardy perennial, bulbous and other plants not included under fruits or ornamentals.

THE Virginia State Crop Pest Commission has recently issued bulletins on the lime-sulphur wash for San Jose scale and on yellows and other important diseases of the peach, which will be of interest to nurserymen, particularly those in the south.

PAPER BIRCH.

Although paper birch is one of the few North American trees with a transcontinental range, being found from Newfoundland and Labrador on the east to Alaska on the west, it occurs in the United States only along the northern border, and is most abundant and most accessible in the extreme northeast. Maine, in particular, is the great paper birch state, and here large tracts of it in almost pure stands are found. This is due to the fact that the birch readily takes possession of land that has been burnt over, and the great Miramichi fire in 1825, together with other similar fires of about the same period, gave it a chance to obtain quite a foothold there.

Unfortunately the paper birch is a short-lived tree and becomes red-hearted quite early in life, so that many of these stands are now overmature and ought to be cut at once. The red heart is inferior wood and can not be used except for the cheapest grade of spools and novelties, so that these old stands are constantly decreasing in value. The spool-makers depend almost wholly on paper birch; shoe pegs and toothpicks and dowels are also made of it, and it is in request for making birch bark canoes, baskets and other similar useful and ornamental articles.

a part of the crowd brought to Georgia by the steamer Eugenia, came to Augusta last Christmas, they were taken at the Berckmans nurseries as an experiment; and the experiment proved altogether satisfactory for employers and employed.

Six of the same boatload went to Bainbridge, Ga., and have been at work there on tobacco farms, but they were not so well pleased as the party on the Berckmans nurseries, and as the result of an interchange of letters among themselves, the six men moved over from Bainbridge and have gone to work with the others. The nineteenth was a stray immigrant who landed in Augusta without employment, but who has proven himself one of the most efficient and intelligent men of the gang.

MANETTI AND RUGOSA SEEDS.

How can I procure Manetti rose seed, also Rosa rugosa seed? How can I cause them to germinate readily—by soaking them in vinegar or in hot water? Should I treat Magnolia grandiflora in the same way? D. W. H.

Seed of Manetti and Rosa rugosa can be procured either from any well established seed house, or, through the agency of such, from some European house. Application made to any large seed house will lead to procuring these seeds with but little delay.

It would be much better, if possible, to procure seeds of all these, including that of the magnolia, stratified, so that there would be no occasion for soaking before sowing. In case the seeds are not

Treatment After Planting.

After planting, we give a thorough watering around the plants without wetting the whole bed, and after that we give no more water for from one to three weeks, as the case may require, but rely on syringing and cultivating to keep things moving.

Keep the soil stirred once a week among newly planted stock; it can be done quicker than the weeds can be pulled out, which come if the soil is not scratched over, and is of incalculable benefit to the plants.

As soon as the planting is finished, all left-over stock can be planted out in the field, where it will take care of itself, and unless required, it can be left there until just before the ground freezes in the fall, when it can be brought in and potted or planted thickly on a bench in a cool house, where they will make good plants for Easter or Memorial day. If lifted about the first part of September, they will make acceptable plants in pots for Christmas. Liberty makes a splendid rose for this purpose. If established in pots in the summer, treated as a hybrid in early fall, it can be well flowered for Christmas.

If needing room now for replanting, any healthy plants to be dug up, if potted, will be fine for Memorial day. Last year we had 800 plants of Liberty in a house with Bride and Maid. They did well up to Christmas, but after that they refused to work. About the first week of March we trimmed the weak wood out of them, and as they grew kept them pinched back until April 15. Between May 15 and June 10 we cut over 10,000 good flowers from these plants. About eight weeks before Christmas is late enough for the final pinching back for Christmas flowers.

This method of holding back flowers is not so new as some may imagine, as it was practiced in the middle west, twenty years ago.

Drying Off.

In regard to drying off plants to be carried over to another year, it seems as if more harm is done by too much drying off than otherwise. The beds will dry naturally in the heat of the summer. The wood should never shrivel and the foliage should be syringed enough to keep down spider. This summer treatment is where local conditions and soils call for different methods.

Syringing.

Syringing is another operation which calls for discretion. Is it paradoxical when we read, "Do not let roses get soft, and do not let them get hard," in notes written on the subject? The softness to be avoided is of the foliage and young shoots, caused by insufficient air, too much fire and syringing; the hardness to be guarded against is of the older wood, caused by too low a temperature and not enough syringing.

How this operation varies with the seasons! Commencing now, with the increasing sun and still lots of fire heat at night, evaporation is rapid and good, heavy syringings are in order to keep the foliage clean and large. Special attention should be given to the ends of benches where pipes may be nearer the plants, and dry walks should be damped down every day. If a general syringing is not given every day, the plants should at least get a spraying through the bottom from every other walk.

I believe in afternoon syringing in the summer time, especially for young and replanted stock. I would not do this later than four o'clock, and not on cold or wet days, and would discontinue it as soon as the nights get cool. As the fall approaches, it must be done early in the morning, so that the plants can dry off before night, or mildew and black spot will soon make their appearance. In the winter, when the plants will not dry, the syringings have to be cut down to about once a week, and even then some varieties have to be shaken to remove the surplus moisture, or they remain wet over night. At this time we rely on frequent damping down of the walks and boards, combined with spraying through the bottom of the plants, to keep the wood soft and induce it to break.

Disbudding is another thing which must be done at the right time. When the plants are growing fast, they should be gone over at least every other day.

Mulching.

Mulching is another important matter. Right now is the time to apply a coat, if not already done, if good flowers are wanted for the next three months. I believe that September 1 is late enough to mulch for Christmas flowers. If applied later, when the days are shortening, it is difficult to dry the plants out and make them break properly. We apply a light dusting of bone flour, about 100 pounds to 2,000 square feet of bench surface, and then for the same space, from one-half to three-quarters of a cord of good cow manure, chopped up with dry loam and a little lime. In a few weeks this becomes a part of the bed, as it will crumble and can be leveled down and is in good condition later to receive liquid manure. If top dressing has to be done later, I would lay it in ridges rather than blanket the whole bench with it. We find pails of wood or zinc the handiest things to use for applying top dressing. Here again, five or six men can work together to good advantage, and will cover about 5,000 square feet in a day.

Fumigation and Ventilation.

Fumigation must be attended to regularly, and the proprietary articles sold are cheaper in the end than the old-fashioned tobacco stems.

A little sulphur should always be kept on the pipes to keep down mildew, always remembering that prevention is better than cure. When flowers are not selling well, the plants require particular attention, as poor stock is of no value in a falling market.

Ventilation is of the utmost importance in rose growing. Commencing now, with the warm spring days approaching, a little air should be given early in the morning. Soon the temperature will begin to rise before seven o'clock, and if air has not been carried all night, the night man can put on a little on his last round. I like to anticipate the rise, and by frequently raising the ventilators a little, always keep ahead of the game, and by this method, the houses never get so hot in the springtime and the plants are kept healthy and clean.

It is important that the houses be kept clean at all times, with no muddy places or water standing in the walks, especially when the firing is reduced to a minimum.

The flowers should be cut as early as possible in hot weather and be placed at once in clean water. It is noticeable that every man's stamp is on his own products. A man handling roses in a store can tell you without any distinguishing mark, who grew this lot, or where these flowers came from.

New Varieties.

In conclusion, a few words about the new varieties. It is the part of wisdom to go slow unless you know what they are. Descriptions are often misleading, and the only way to find out is by experience. Take No. 1 for instance. A friend writes me: "I intend to plant 5,000 of this and, by the way, I have not heard of any fault which this rose has." No. 2 on the list he thinks enough of to put in 2,000 plants. I saw this exhibited some time ago and remarked to a friend that the flowers did not look perfect. He thought that this rose would produce a large percentage of deformed flowers. Speaking to another man who had seen the flowers, and asking his opinion, he said the flowers looked as if they had been fumigated. Take No. 3, which I picked out for a winner: Looking over a large place recently, I had pointed out to me two plants growing on the end of the bench, and was asked why they did not grow like the others, which were a standard kind, and growing luxuriantly. I could not tell why; they all looked exactly alike; the chances were in favor of the two plants doing nothing. The answer was, those are No. 3. I said things then which I will not repeat here, for I had ordered a few of that kind. Take No. 4, condemned by several good growers: I asked one large grower what he thought of it, and he said, "I have ordered it and wish that I had not." The next man says: "Don't believe all he tells you."

I think that undoubtedly, when White Killarney comes on the market, if it proves to be a good shipper, it will be an acquisition, as it possesses the good growing qualities of its sister, Killarney.

In seeking information, after asking several questions of a friend, I finally asked him one, and I think that he truthfully replied, "That's what I am trying to find out!" So with us all. If I have helped anyone here with these few remarks I am thankful, and hope to hear something from others of benefit to myself.

NAME OF PLANT.

Under separate cover I am sending a slip from a small plant which was given to me by a private gardener who did not know the name of it. I am not acquainted with it either, and as I am much pleased with it, would like to know its name and best method of propagation.

R. P.

The plant is Bougainvillea Sanderiana. Half ripened wood cut in 6-inch lengths will root during spring if given a good bottom heat. A house kept at 55 degrees as a minimum is better than a warmer one. A bottom heat of 75 degrees should be maintained. These cuttings, if kept moist, will root in a month. Fully ripened wood may also be used, but takes longer to root. Pot off into sandy loam as soon as rooted and keep close until roots push around the sides of the little pots; then grow a trifle cooler.

A white seedling which is largely planted and which has been shown at Boston and other shows, was looking fine. It is the most wonderfully prolific white the committee had seen. The flower is large, full and the stem ideal.—Boston News-letter in Nov. 28, 1907, issue of THE FLORISTS' REVIEW.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

The Market.

This market for the last few weeks has been in a demoralized condition. Especially is this the case in carnations, brought about chiefly by the larger markets offering thousand lots at low figures; consequently the small market has to meet these prices in order to move the stock. We fail to see where the large market receives any particular relief. It at the most only relieves itself of 2,000 or possibly 3,000 carnations and, while getting no particular good out of it, spoils the market of the other fellow completely, and, until these conditions cease, we can see no relief for the carnation market here, which has heretofore been a pretty good one. Roses are moving fairly well, considerable funeral work going around; aside from this there is very little doing.

Club Meeting.

The Commercial Florists' Association met March 9. A few varieties of carnations and roses were on exhibition and created a good deal of interest. Baur & Smith sent a vase of May, a carnation that looks like a good one to take the place of Enchantress; fine form, color and stem, and not a sign of bursting in the calyx, and its keeping qualities are excellent.

White Bros., of Gasport, N. Y., sent along some fine specimens of Beacon, Victory, White Lawson and others, all fine, healthy, well-grown stock.

S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co. exhibited a vase of rose Mrs. Jardine, which created much favorable comment. H. B. S.

I INCLOSE the money for the renewal of my subscription to the REVIEW. I consider this the best investment in printer's ink that I have ever made.—C. D. OTIS.

I WISH that you would discontinue my advertisement until further notice, as I have all the inquiries that I am able to take care of.—C. E. FRANK, Supt. of Parks, Oklahoma City, Okla.

JACKSON, TENN.—T. L. Metcalfe, proprietor of the Metcalfe Greenhouses, at Hopkinsville, Ky., Madisonville, Ky., and Clarksville, Tenn., opened a store here March 9. Mr. Metcalfe himself was present and the store was thronged with visitors during the day. H. H. Crawford is the local manager.

IT MAY INTEREST YOU TO KNOW THAT OUR NEW CARNATION

MAY

is outselling Enchantress in this market. It sells for the same price over the retail counter, and our store-men call for it in preference. Isn't that enough evidence of its selling qualities? For the grower it is the most profitable light pink that has ever come to our notice. It is free and early, and every bloom is on a good stem and salable. We are shipping fine cuttings now and shall be pleased to serve you.

$12.00 PER 100; $100.00 PER 1000.

You make no mistake in buying this variety. We can also supply fine, strong cuttings of all the leading varieties in quantity. Write us.

CARNATION CUTTINGS

We are in unusually good position to supply exceptionally well-rooted, healthy stock. We have such a large quantity of flowering plants that we propagate only from heel cuttings from flowering shoots. Our cuttings are rooted in light, sunny, airy houses, and we are sure will satisfy the most critical buyer.

A prominent carnation grower writes: "You seem to be the only firm in the business that knows how to pack stock and have it reach the buyer in good condition, and I have always found your cuttings cheaper than the same varieties from others at much lower figures."

While our prices may not always be the cheapest, we certainly can give, quality considered, as good value as, if not better than, is obtainable anywhere.

We offer also BEACON and RED CHIEF, from sand, $6.00 per 100; $50.00 per 1000. From soil, $7.50 per 100; $60.00 per 1000. Also VICTORY, MELODY, WHITE PERFECTION, from sand, $4.00 per 100; $35.00 per 1000. From soil, $6.00 per 100; $45.00 per 1000. VARIEGATED LAWSON, WHITE LAWSON and RED LAWSON, from sand, $3.00 per 100; $25.00 per 1000. From soil, $4.00 per 100; $35.00 per 1000. We can also supply WINONA and AFTERGLOW, $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

Buyers will find transplanted stock offered from soil well worth the difference in price.

WINSOR, which we introduced last year, has proved to be the finest novelty introduced in years. We think it is the most profitable variety grown today, considering its fine color, splendid keeping qualities, and productiveness. When properly grown, it leaves little to be desired, and almost everyone succeeds with it.

WHITE ENCHANTRESS, the best all-carnation on account of its large size, long stem, earliness, and productiveness. Our White Enchantress, exhibited at the Carnation Convention at Washington, was the only White Enchantress exhibited that received an award.

Strong rooted cuttings, now ready for delivery, from sand,

RAMBLING JOTTINGS.

William Mathews, of Utica, N. Y., is shipping Cattleya Trianae in large numbers to the west. He has some handsome plants of C. Veitchii superbissima and alba. He called my attention to an error in my note about bougainvillea at White-law Reid's. It should read B. spectabilis and not B. speciosa. It is the most beautiful of the species.

C. F. Baker & Son, of Utica, have a big batch of lilies just right for Easter. It looks as though there will be enough to go around.

George Main, of Gloversville, N. Y., intends giving up his houses after spring business is over, if he finds a suitable taker. His health is not of the best.

Main & Fear, of Gloversville, report rather slow business of late, but prospects are good for Easter, judging by inquiries made and orders on hand.

John Barson, of Johnstown, N. Y., expects to rebuild his old plant as soon as the spring rush is over. His newer block is located very conveniently in town and answers the purpose of a store.

Joseph Beach, of South Hadley Center, Mass., has returned from his sojourn in the south, much interested in what he saw floriculturally. The establishments of the craft in Savannah were all visited and he says that they produce as fine stock as is grown north.

Mark Aitken, of Springfield, Mass., may now be seen at his store, greatly benefited by the trip he made to Bermuda, where he took note of the lily fields. He says that undoubtedly some growers are taking pains to rogue the stock, but that he saw fields that contained a large percentage of diseased bulbs. It is conceded this is almost solely the result of shipping the blooms and thus sapping the vitality of the bulb. M.

FARMINGTON, CONN.—Mrs. Hugh Chesney has sold her greenhouses, including her house on Canal street, to Joseph Haworth, of Yonkers, N. Y. Mr. Haworth will continue the business.

DAYTON, O.—The different merchants in the Algonquin Hotel block, including H. H. Ritter, adopted the rather unusual course of choosing the same day, March 10, for the formal opening of their stores. In this simultaneous opening Mr. Ritter's store was conspicuous for its attractiveness. His display of flowers was superb.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

John Ralph, of Saratoga Springs, N. Y., is much pleased with the house recently built by Hitchings & Co.

H. W. Bensell has charge of the greenhouses on the John Schafer estate, at Ballston Spa, N. Y., and has built up a good shipping business.

Fred Goldring, at Slingerlands, has a fine stock for Easter. The lily problem is uppermost just now.

R. W. Zobel, of Albany, N. Y., says that many growers make the mistake of pushing the lily and then retarding, which is one cause of disease. He does not check the plant when once started and he is conceded to have the cleanest and most uniform batch in this section.

Sambrook & Co. are shipping in fine carnations from the new plant at Berlin. They are near neighbors to the gladiolus king, Arthur Cowee.

Mrs. L. Gloechner, of Albany, has added two houses, each 33x150 feet, by Hitchings & Co. and the Pierson U-Bar Co.

John Hartmann, of Winfield Junction, N. Y., had an exciting experience recently, when he brought a load of palms and cut flowers to decorate the Alhambra Gardens. During the temporary absence of himself and helper, someone stole the two-horse team, wagon and contents. At the time of this writing Mr. Hartmann, with the assistance of the police, was still on the hunt for the lost property.

J. C. Hatcher, of Amsterdam, N. Y., will open a branch store in Schenectady, April 1, with everything up-to-date. His son, George, will have charge. At the time of my visit the whole force was busy making some handsome pieces for shipment to Pittsburg.

J. W. Hilton, of Amsterdam, predicts a busy Easter and has a fine lot of stock for the occasion. M.

BATON ROUGE, LA.—The business heretofore conducted by F. W. Heroman is now run under the name of F. W. Heroman & Son, Fred I. Heroman having been taken into partnership.

JANESVILLE, WIS.—C. G. Dwight has let the contracts for the erection of three houses, each 27x261, to be used in the growing of roses and carnations for the wholesale market. ## Horticultural Society Meets.

The annual rose and carnation night of the Lenox Horticultural Society occurred March 7; and was the most successful of any ever held. Some sixty vases were shown, of the leading varieties, and the quality was high. Beacon seemed to be the most popular scarlet, Winsor for pink, White Perfection and White Enchantress as whites, Pink Imperial in the dark pink class, and Enchantress in the light pink. Mrs. Patten outclassed Variegated Lawson and Harlowarden showed strongest among the crimson varieties. The new crimson, Harvard, shown by J. D. Cockcroft, of Northport, L. I., as well as Wanoka, exhibited by the Wanoka Greenhouses, Barneveld, N. Y., were given the society's highest award.

A splendid vase of gardenias was shown by F. Heeremans, whose success with them has been far above the average. Stocks cut from 4-inch pots running from thirty to forty inches in length were shown by A. H. Wingett, the varieties being Queen Alexandra, Beauty of Nice, and Princess Alice. A mammoth bunch of 300 Princess of Wales violets, which for length of stem and general good quality could not be surpassed, was shown by F. Heeremans; also, the new Boston violet, sent by Wm. Sim, of Cliftondale, Mass., which unfortunately arrived in poor condition. Roses were exhibited by A. H. Wingett and F. Heeremans, also a salmon-pink sport of Beacon carnation by the former.

The following is the list of prize winners: First prizes to F. Heeremans for twenty-four Winsor, Enchantress, twelve Robert Craig and Helen Gould. To A. H. Wingett for twenty-four White Perfection, Pink Imperial, and twelve Mrs. M. A. Patten. To A. J. Loveless for twenty-four Beacon and twelve White Enchantress. To D. Dunn for twelve Winsor, and Red Lawson. To G. Breed for twelve Harlowarden and Daheim. To S. Carlquist for twelve Enchantress. First prizes to A. H. Wingett for twelve Brides, Bridesmaids and Richmond. To F. Heeremans for twelve Liberty and American Beauty. Certificate of merit to J. D. Cockcroft for new crimson carnation Harvard. Certificate of merit to Wanoka Greenhouses for new crimson carnation Wanoka. Certificate of cultural commendation to A. H. Wingett for vase of mixed stocks. Diplomas to F. Heeremans for a vase of 100 Enchantress, vase of gardenias, and violets. Diploma to W. Sim for new Boston violet. The judges were G. H. Thompson, E. J. Norman and R. Speirs. G. H. I.

PREPARE FOR EASTER

In Philadelphia there's a florist noted,
Aschmann his name, his plants beyond compare;
To a sweet girl his heart is all devoted,
Next rank his Araucarias, passing fair;
When seen together they're a pair so charming—Brimful of beauty—both he cannot keep;
So to his heart he'll hold his winsome darling,
While you may have the Araucarias cheap.

No dull times at Aschmann's. Come and see our activity and the big rush in shipping Azalea Indica, etc. Why not? Remember our Azaleas are of first-class, No. 1 stock.

Azalea Indica. We make a specialty in importing every year an immense stock of this so well-favored Easter plant. Only special American, well-tested varieties are imported, grown under contract for us by an azalea specialist of Ghent, Belgium. If you need Azalea Plants, don't look in vain around the country for bargains, but come or write direct to us. We will be able to supply, with the best obtainable in the American market at moderate prices, plants covered with buds, in good, healthy condition, right for Easter, planted in October and November, in 6 to 7-in. pots.

Please take notice. In justice to our customers we do not sell azaleas in the fall, disposing of the best and leaving the residue for Easter, but we carry them along, thus having for our customers the finest azaleas for Easter. Next, we take great care to select only the ones with plenty of buds. Mme. Vander Cruyssen (have 2500 of them) is the best well-known pink variety, so that nothing further need be said about it. Plants are covered with buds and are round as an apple. Simon Mardner (a pink), Vervaekeana (a variegated rose), Bernard Andre Alba (a white), Niobe (a white), Deutsche Perle (a white), Empress of India (variegated), Prof. Wolters and about six more fine varieties, 60c to 75c, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75 to $2.00 each.

An immense stock of choice Easter plants, blooming Easter week or earlier if desired, are now ready for immediate shipment. Come or mail your order direct to headquarters. Our reputation over the entire country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, in growing Easter stock for the wholesale market for the fifteen years past ought to be sufficient guarantee as to the truth of what we say and advertise. Be wise. Never mind about the nonsense hard time talk. Look for a big Easter trade, which is sure to come. Book your order in time, while we have stock to spare and plenty of it. All our houses are full to their utmost capacity with the choicest plants, in bud and bloom, just right for Easter or earlier if wanted.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

Carnations are plentiful. The supply is greater than the demand and prices have gone to pieces. The choicest can be bought at $20 per thousand. Tea roses also are plentiful, American Beauties not quite so much so. Sweet peas are equal to the demand. Bulb stock is a glut. Daffodils and jonquils are selling as low as $1.50 per hundred. Violets are plentiful and some of the cut flower stores advertise the best singles at 8 cents a bunch. The weather is exceedingly warm for this season of the year and everything is coming into bloom. There is a great fear now that carnations will be off crop by Easter. Easter lilies are on time and at present there seems to be very few diseased plants. Tulips are up from two to three inches above the ground on the lawns in the city. Bulb stock will be hard to hold for Easter, as it is advancing fast. Azaleas are coming in fast and meet with ready sales.

The fine weather is creating a feverish desire in the minds of the people to plant out geraniums and other bedding plants. Quite a few geraniums are being sold every day; also flower seeds, especially sweet pea and nasturtium seed. People are becoming more awakened to the idea of planting their back yards in flowers and vegetables and thus beautifying our city.

Various Notes.

George M. Kellogg is shipping in some fine carnations.

C. C. Maynard expects a rushing business this spring. He recently took over $800 worth of orders for shrubbery in three days. Mr. Maynard has no greenhouses, but does a great deal of bedding out.

One of the prettiest weddings of the winter was put up by W. H. Humfeld, at the Baltimore hotel, March 12, when Miss Minnie Ryder and Mr. Barth were united in marriage. There were about a thousand daffodils and narcissi used in the dining-room. The large centerpiece, diamond in shape, was over eleven feet long by five and a half feet wide. White roses and palms in profusion were used in the front parlor.

Thomas Keeshan, stockholder in the Junction City Floral Co., of Junction City, Kan., was visiting the florists here last week. They have 19,000 feet of glass devoted to the raising of cut flowers exclusively, growing fine carnations and roses for the high class trade. They shipped some fine cut flowers to the surrounding towns this winter and Mr. Keeshan was much pleased with their last winter's business. W. H. H.

NEW ORLEANS.

The Market.

During the month of March in New Orleans more plants are sold at the markets than in any other month of the year. So far this year business has been quite fair, considering the past mild winter. Bedding plants are generally in demand. Geraniums were not killed by frost and are now very cheap, only the light and fancy colors being bought. Ferns sell well, but prices are low. Soft palms are less in demand than ever. Hardy palms for outside planting find a ready sale all the time.

Various Notes.

At the committee meeting held March 12, the prize list for the next fall flower show was revised, and Chairman J. Newsham appointed as a sub-committee to look for a location the following members: H. Papworth, Joseph Steckler and P. Chopin.

H. Baker, at his downtown garden, has a beautiful batch of longiflorum lilies from bulbs growing almost wild around New Orleans. They have been grown in pots in coldframes and look more healthy than any imported stock, either from Bermuda or Japan. More attention and careful growing should be given to our home-growing stock of these bulbs and then there will be better success and less complaint about disease of imported bulbs. M. M. L.

ALL our replies have mentioned the REVIEW.—GOSHEN FLORAL Co., Goshen, Ind.

KEOKUK IA.—C. Sommer erected one greenhouse last fall and may add one more this spring, as the trade is large enough to use considerably more stock than can be grown in the present houses. The place is finely located at the entrance of a cemetery.

SEA SAND FOR CUTTINGS.

Much might be said in favor of the use of sea sand for propagating, says a writer in the Horticultural Advertiser (English). I believe I have previously referred to the subject, but I find there are still many practical men who seem afraid to use it. Quite recently I was asked by a good propagator if it was safe to use it for propagating purposes and I could unhesitatingly say, yes! So many seem afraid that the salt would be injurious; there may be some plants which would not succeed, but after many years' experience I can say that I have never found anything that would not succeed equally well, if not better, in sea sand, than in the ordinary silver sand.

It may not be that the sand from all parts of the coast would be suitable, but I have had it from various sources and have always found it quite satisfactory. My first experience was with some of a brownish color, which came from the southwest coast. I put in cuttings of over a dozen different subjects and did not have a single failure. It is, however, with the sand from Lowestoft that I have had most experience. The quality of the sand varies; some is almost white and clean, and I have had it of a dirty brown; this, when used for choice cuttings, requires washing, but this is not much trouble. A good shovelful may be put into a pail of water and well stirred around, the dirty water poured off and the sand turned out on a bench or board to dry. The great advantage of washing is that it prevents caking, when the sand is used for the surface. Some samples I have seen have been coarse, and required sifting before using for some purposes.

In regard to the salt it contains, I believe it is beneficial rather than otherwise. On one occasion I put in cuttings of Clethra arborea, half of which I put in Reigate sand and the others in sea sand. Under exactly the same treatment the latter kept up quite fresh, while those in Reigate sand withered down. I remember once a propagator objected to use the sea sand for crica cuttings, but later on I had a batch put in by another man and I never saw cricas root better.

Greenhouse Heating.

LOSS FROM SMOKING CHIMNEYS.

The prevention of smoke in the burning of coal is a subject that ought to be of special interest to florists, since their product is so peculiarly susceptible to injury from a smoky atmosphere. The greenhouse man with smoky chimneys is not only exposing himself to the danger of damage suits and at the same time wasting coal by imperfect combustion, but he is also damaging his own stock. The following paragraphs on the subject are quoted from a bulletin issued by the University of Illinois, with the title of "Bulletin No. 15—How to Burn Illinois Coal Without Smoke":

"The destruction of property and the effect upon the health of the community due to the smoke nuisance are matters upon which there is not an opportunity to dwell in this article. Both of these subjects are now matters of common, everyday knowledge to the residents of our American cities. Something should be said, however, about the fuel losses due to smoking chimneys. The absence of smoke by no means indicates perfect combustion. It may simply mean excessive air dilution, and this means uneconomical operation. Statements are frequently seen in the daily press to the effect that one-quarter or one-third of the fuel burned goes off in the black smoke issuing from the chimney. Such statements are very far from the truth. It is doubtful if the black carbon particles which issue from chimneys and which we call soot ever amount to one per cent of the fuel burned in any furnace. It takes but a small amount of soot to give a dense black color to smoke. If it were to save only these soot particles, we could not afford expensive stoker and furnace settings. The appearance of black smoke is, fortunately, the signal of incomplete combustion, and the losses due to this cause are many times the losses due to the carrying away of the small soot particles. This matter is well stated by that practical and clear writer, Wm. H. Booth, as follows:

"It is customary to speak of smoke and the smoke nuisance, as though black smoke were the only feature of imperfect combustion that demanded a remedy. But it cannot be too strongly emphasized that the visible impurities of the waste gases from factory chimneys are the least harmful part of their constituents; and that the invisible gases, which too often escape as the result of imperfect combustion, are far more detrimental in their effects upon vegetation and upon the health of the community. These invisible gases consist of unaltered hydrocarbons and of carbon monoxide; their presence is due either to deficiency of air or to the lack of the requisite temperature in the combustion area. Smoke is the visible sign of the presence of these deleterious gases. It is, therefore, a useful signal of something wrong in the combustion process. Smoke ought to be attacked, not only because it brings dirt and depression in its train, but because its emission is accompanied by that of gases which are directly detrimental to the health of all living things, and at the same time carry away much heat from the plant of the fuel user. Both on humanitarian and economic grounds its suppression is called for.

"If there is a deficient air supply, part of the carbon atoms will not find enough oxygen atoms with which to combine and there will be a considerable part of the escaping gases leaving the chimney as carbon monoxide, instead of being burned to carbon dioxide. For each pound of carbon burned only to carbon monoxide there will be a loss of approximately 10,000 heat units and this constitutes the great source of loss so frequently referred to as the loss due to incomplete combustion. This loss may readily amount to five per cent of the total heat in the coal. The density of the accompanying smoke may or may not be an indication of the proportion, though the loss due to carbon monoxide in perfectly smokeless chimney gases in practice will usually not exceed 0.05 of one per cent. Smokelessness is a relatively safe indication that the total heat has been liberated. Unfortunately, it gives no indication of the degree of efficiency with which the heat is being utilized. The problem from the standpoint of the operator demands smokelessness with a minimum air supply. Losses due to sensible heat in the stack gases, while seldom rising higher than thirty-two per cent of the total heat, may be as low as ten to twelve per cent without smoke or incomplete combustion. These figures are found in the fuel test reports of the United States Geological Survey under Illinois coals. The following tabulation will serve to indicate how the heat generated in a boiler furnace may be distributed when operating under poor, average and best conditions:

	Percentage of Heat.
	Poor Condition.	Average Condition.	Best Condition.
Absorbed by the boiler .....	50.0	65.0	75.0
Carried away in dry chimney gases .....	24.0	16.0	10.0
Radiation and unaccounted for losses .....	15.0	12.0	10.0
Moisture formed by burning of hydrogen .....	4.0	3.5	3.0
Evaporating moisture in coal .....	2.0	2.0	1.5
Incomplete combustion of carbon .....	5.0	1.5	0.5
Total heat .....	100.0	100.0	100.0

"The per cents given in the last column of this tabulation are seldom attained in present practice, but they are by no means impossible. They represent conditions for which we should continually strive. Losses of twenty to twenty-five per cent are not unusual, both with and without smoke. Too little air is wrong. Too much air is wrong. Absolutely complete combustion can be obtained using Illinois coal burned on an automatic stoker with as low as thirty per cent excess of air. The question is one of proper furnace construction to meet the requirements of the fuel, coupled with a good fireman and an intelligent use of instruments which will tell him at all times the conditions of the combustion and draft."

Business for the last week seems to have improved somewhat. Carnations keep on the move. Roses are becoming more plentiful, but prices are good. Easter lilies seem to be at a standstill, while callas hold their own. Bulbous stock is only salable in small quantities.

One of the prettiest events of the season was the spring opening at H. H. Ritter's store, in the Algonquin Hotel building, March 10. Fully 11,000 people visited the store during the afternoon and evening. Mr. Ritter presented each visitor with a carnation, as a souvenir of the occasion.

Guaranteed Analysis Florists' Fertilizers!

From now to replanting time you will need some of these. Our prices can't be beat if you insist on having the pure article. (There are lots of "cheap" offers to be had—but an impure fertilizer is not only valueless, but harmful, as growers all know, and not to be used, even if it costs nothing.) We guarantee the absolute purity of our fertilizers, as follows:

PULVERIZED CATTLE MANURE.....	1.50	5.50	7.50	14.00

This we believe to be the coming fertilizer. Bassett & Washburn, Hinsdale, Illinois, after using two cars for trial, ordered three hundred tons, and say: "It is fully three to four times as strong as rough manure, and being put up in bags, not a pound is wasted, which makes it cheaper in our opinion than rough manure which we got for freight and cost of loading."

Not only should cut flower growers give this a trial, but florists who do bedding and other planting will find it a good seller to put on lawns. Clean—no odor. Write for prices on car lots.

The Market.

Stock of all kinds moved somewhat better last week. Though heavy shipments were received, the demand showed improvement.

Carnations are beginning to drop off a trifle and it now looks as if there might be a short supply of this flower for Easter. Roses are coming finely, with plenty of any color to fill all orders. Sweet peas, pansies, valley and lilies are coming in heavily, but are moving at fair prices. Bulb stock is a drag, selling at almost any price. Violets are also moving slowly.

Various Notes.

It is with regret that we report the death of Mr. Darnell, father of L. F. Darnell, manager of the J. M. Gasser Co., who passed away at Raleigh, N. C., March 9. L. F. Darnell left the city on short notice, but arrived too late to see his father alive.

Milford Parks has released his stand at Luna Park and will conduct business on the same plan as last season.

The death of J. M. Gasser is reported in the obituary column.

The F. R. Williams Co. has let the contract for eight rose houses, each 25x300, even-span and open under the gutters. The Evans ventilator machines will be used, and the firm has placed an order for 38,400 square feet of Everlasting tile bench. They have used this bench for the last five years, for both roses and carnations, and are well pleased with it.

Some fine carnations are sent to this market by Chappell & Son, of Garrettsville, O.

THE AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY

OFFICERS ELECTED.

President, August Poehlmann, Chicago, Ill.

Secretary, Benjamin Hammond, Fishkill, N. Y.

Treasurer, Harry O. May, Summit, N. J.

Members Executive Committee: Philip Breitmeyer, Detroit; A. Farenwald, Hillside, Pa.

MEETING PLACE FOR 1909, BUFFALO, N. Y.

Adolph Farenwald says that the special feature of the exhibition of the American Rose Society on at Chicago this week is the notable success which has attended the efforts of the Philadelphia exhibitors, and possibly the other modest gentlemen from the City of Brotherly Love will agree with him, but in the eyes of western growers, magnificent as are the flowers from Philadelphia, the most wonderful features of the show are two superb vases of Killarney staged by W. H. Elliott, of Brighton, Mass. Chicago growers thought they had mastered the needs of Killarney, but they were unanimous in the opinion that they have yet something to learn. Mr. Elliott's Richmond, while excellent in every particular, did not outclass those locally grown or from Philadelphia.

The exhibition as a whole is the largest display of commercial roses ever staged in this country. How far it exceeds the meeting of last year, when conditions were entirely different, is shown by the fact that last year there was but one exhibit of Beauties, while in one class this season there were nine entries of fifty blooms each. Eight were staged, the fine flowers of the Florex Gardens, Philadelphia, not arriving until after the judging had been done. There are several classes for Beauties, with entries in each one.

It was notable that the growers did not enter for the society's stated prizes, the competition being for the special prizes arranged for locally. Nearly every one of these was competed for and a grander lot of stock never was staged, but one feature of previous exhibitions was lacking: the large pot plants were not in evidence. M. H. Walsh, of Woods Hole, Mass., who has contributed most of these in previous years, thought a trip to Chicago too long. There was no entry for the Breitmeyer-Boddington prizes.

Aside from the attention attracted by the superlative quality of certain exhibits, the special features of interest were the new roses. Wyndmoor, which won two silver trophies for Myers & Samtman, was well liked. Western growers have seen Mrs. Jardine, exhibited by Robert Scott & Son, on several previous occasions, but the flowers shown this week were the best yet sent west. E. G. Hill 'o. staged a vase of Rhea Reid, now well known to Chicago growers. Against it was Cardinal, by Poehlmann, but the two are really not in the same class. Mrs. Potter Palmer and Mrs. Marshall Field were shown in good shape, each winning a special prize.

Julius Roehrs Co., Rutherford, N. J., sent a fine display of its new Rambler, Newport Fairy. E. Wienhoeber said it was one of the finest things from a retailor's point of view that he had seen in a long time.

The American Rose Society convened March 25 for its annual business meeting. The first order of business was the reports of officers.

President's Report.

After reference to the successful meeting at Washington last year, and reference to the importance of Chicago as the city "where more roses are grown and distributed wider than from any other center in this country," coupled with thanks to the Chicago florists for their hospitality, President Simpson said in part:

In seeking to make recruits to our organization one frequently hears the remark, "What is the use of having so many societies, anyway, and what benefit would it be to me if I should join the American Rose Society?" The only answer that I can give is that practically every grower of repute who has had his attention called to the aims and purposes of this organization has become a member of it, and if we give the matter a little thought we will find that, with a few exceptions, the men who hold aloof are back numbers in the trade. You will find that the brainiest and most progressive men in the business today are members of the Rose, the Carnation, the Chrysanthemum, or some other society devoted to their specialty. An orchid society is now being projected as a necessary adjunct to the orchid business. Read the printed matter on the back of the Rose Society's letter paper and you will find its aim is "To increase the general interest in the cultivation and to improve the standard of excellence of the rose for all the people." "To foster, stimulate and increase the production in every possible way of improved varieties of the rose suitable to our American climate and requirements." A very noble aim this, surely, and one that should naturally inure to the benefit of every man engaged in the growing or selling of roses for a living.

The annual exhibitions, affording as they do, to raisers of new roses, the best opportunity of getting their novelties before a critical tribunal, and the opportunity offered the searchers for novelties to see these and judge of their merit, are an important feature of the work of such societies, and the man who follows up these exhibitions and has the judgment to discern the good and bad points of both new and old varieties, and will gauge his planting accordingly, discarding the varieties that have become old and common and giving space to newer sorts of undoubted merit, is the man who will have money to build more greenhouses and buy automobiles.

Few of the visitors to the Washington or Boston exhibition returned home without receiving inspiration to strive for a higher grade of flowers, with a feeling of satisfaction with his calling, and with a determination to add dignity to it, and to make his business stand for something in the community.

The Rose Society certainly claims a share in the good work of making conditions more favorable for the rose grower of today. What has been done up to the present, however, is as nothing compared to the work that lies before it when, with increased membership and available funds, it is in a position to disseminate knowledge that will enable lovers of the rose, and that includes practically every citizen of this country, to plant varieties and cultivate them in such a way as to give joy and satisfaction to the planter. There will then be sold by the nurseryman and florist for outdoor planting more roses than we can at present conceive of.

More has been done during the term of our present secretary to put the society upon a sound and permanent basis, and to present its claims and benefits to the florists of the entire country, and to many who do not grow roses for a living, than most of you are aware of. The volume of correspondence and the amount of clerical work done would stagger most of us, if it should be put upon us, and he certainly deserves the thanks of every member of this body for his painstaking work, done entirely for love of the good cause, and refusing any pecuniary compensation therefor.

During the year the expenses have been out of proportion to the income, the officers having advanced money to meet obligations and carry on the work, trusting to the receipts of this meeting to balance accounts. Failing in this, I suggest that a few friends of the society meet here in Chicago and together lift the treasury out of its awkward predicament.

A resolution was favorably received at the Washington meeting requesting the executive committee to consider the proposition of establishing a rose journal. This matter has received considerable thought and discussion during the year at the hands of the committee, and the secretary was authorized to go ahead and issue a prospectus, which has been sent out broadcast and has been commented on favorably. The secretary will present to you a fuller report on this proposition. I would ask for it your care-society to furnish the money and take care of all the details, and our society to offer certificates, medals, etc., and assist in arranging the schedule. The offer was accepted and the exhibition is assured, but the executive committee of the Rose Society authorized the offering of certificates, bronze and silver medals for new varieties only.

It is the wish and desire of the members of the committee that the nurserymen, and all others who grow outdoor roses extensively, will keep this exhibition in mind and arrange to make extensive displays of roses in Bronx park next June. The educational features of such an exhibition that is free to all should be great, and as an advertising medium it is not to be despised.

In arranging the program for this meeting the commercial rose grower has perhaps been brought to the front more than the amateur, which probably is as it should be at the present stage, but it will not do at all, I think, to allow this society, now or in the future, to drift into a trade organization and have its work restricted to the holding of exhibitions and exploiting of new varieties. That would be praiseworthy work, but it can do that and a great deal more by opening wide its doors and seeking the cooperation of every man and woman in this broad land who have roses in their hearts or in their gardens. We should reported from time to time in the REVIEW, and said in part:

The life membership fund gradually increases and this affords a revenue of four per cent on the investment. The fund is now close to $3,000. Our life membership stands at fifty. The annual membership paid for the year 1907 was 110, and the associate membership was ten.

The money awarded by the society at its last show reached the sum of $309 for stated premiums, besides the specials.

The bulletin of the annual meeting, which was begun under Secretary Stewart's term of office, has been continued and 600 were issued last year. These books seem to be highly appreciated, secretaries of kindred societies asking for them in various instances. To get out these books nicely is considerable expense, and part of this cost was met by soliciting advertisements. Out of sixty letters sent out, favorable replies came back from twelve persons.

At the Washington meeting last March the desirability of issuing a certificate of merit for new roses which did not reach the score required for such novelties to win a medal was recommended. The executive committee prepared such certificate and issued seven: L. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind., for Rhea Reid; F. H. Kramer, Washington, D. C., for Queen Beatrice; Myers & Samtman, Wyndmoor, Pa., for Wyndmoor; M. H. Walsh, Woods Hole, Mass., for Paradise, La Fimma, Delight and Juniata. This recognition seemed to please everyone.

Up to last year there had not been any certificate of life membership nor any society seal. A handsome certificate was made, a special seal prepared and adopted and fifty-four of these life certificates have been issued to persons who have paid the $50, which is the amount that is creating the permanent fund of the society.

At the last annual meeting a rose journal was a topic which grew out of the question given by President Simpson: "How to increase the interest and thus the membership." The secretary assumed the responsibility of issuing a prospectus and of mailing same to all present membership.

Treasurer's Report.

Treasurer H. O. May reported cash receipts of $1,330.62, disbursements of $1,077.07 and balance on hand March 20, 1908, $253.55 in the general fund. He reported seven new life memberships, making fifty-three to date.

The treasurer's report brought out considerable discussion, as bills shortly to be met will more than absorb the funds in the bank. W. A. Manda moved that the executive committee be authorized to dispense with the society's offers of cash prizes for future exhibitions, if in the committee's judgment this seems best, and after discussion the motion prevailed. J. A. Valentine offered the suggestion that exhibitors might be given the choice of having certificates and permitting the regular and special cash prizes to revert to the society.

Thursday's Session.

Thursday's session was devoted to the reading of papers and their discussion, followed by election of officers. The paper by William H. Elliott brought out the best discussion of the convention. Adolph Farenwald championed the small rose house and the strong points, and the weak ones, in each style of construction ful and thoughtful consideration. If the members will support it in sufficient numbers it can be put through; otherwise it must be dropped.

Through the good offices of our ex-president, Mr. Newbold, an invitation has been extended to the American Rose Society by the Horticultural Society of New York to hold a June show this year in Bronx park, New York City, the latter have in our ranks every authority on roses in the country, and the secretary should have a list of these authorities to whom he could refer questions that are too difficult for him to handle.

Secretary's Report.

Secretary Hammond, after thanking the trade press for cooperation, detailed the action of the executive committee, as were brought out. Mr. Elliott emphasized the fact that the larger the house, the better the quality of the construction must be. The paper by Mr. Maynadier followed and fitted in with Mr. Elliott's.

The election of officers was a protracted affair, for August Poehlmann's modesty caused him to seek every avenue of escape from the honor the society insisted upon bestowing upon him.

Papers Read.

Papers read during the meeting were as follows: "Roses in Colorado," by J. A. Valentine, Denver; "Soils," by G. B. Maynadier, Washington; "Roses in Pots," by Robert Craig, Philadelphia; "Best Size of Rose House," by W. H. Elliott, Brighton, Mass.; "Roses from a Retailer's Point of View," by J. F. Sullivan, Detroit.

W. A. Manda, South Orange, N. J., also made an interesting extemporaneous address on the subject, "The Rose Garden."

Thursday evening the Chicago Florists' Club entertained the visitors at a banquet at the Union restaurant.

On Friday a session was held to consider ways and means of advancing the society's interests, especially in the matter of raising funds and getting before the general public.

ROSES IN COLORADO.

[A paper by J. A. Valentine, of Denver, Colo., read before the American Rose Society at its annual meeting in Chicago, March 25 to 27, 1908.]

The state of Colorado, situated a little to the west of the geographical center of the United States, is about 375 miles long from east to west, about 275 miles reach the Missouri river at Omaha in about 500 miles. From there for more than 500 miles you cross an immense plain, with an average rise of about seven feet to the mile, so that by the time you reach Denver you will be a mile above sea level.

You will have traversed the state of Nebraska from east to west, and a large part of this state is now fertile and productive farms, although within the memory of some of those here today it was a portion of the Great American Desert, and considered sterile and unproductive. My own personal knowledge of this region only extends back about twenty-five years, but I can well remember when the meridian of 100 degrees was spoken of as a dead line, beyond which it was absolutely impossible to conduct any farming enterprise without irrigation. Today the situation is so far changed that a great many people are contending that profitable farming without irrigation is possible, even as far west as Denver, and more than that, they are showing a good many substantial results to justify the faith within them.

Surface and Climate of Colorado.

The eastern half of Colorado is part of the immense plain already mentioned, and the western half is mountainous. The main range of the Rockies lies directly west of Denver, with the crest of the range only about fifty miles away, with numerous peaks reaching an elevation of 14,000 feet, and the gaps or passes ranging from 10,000 to 12,000 feet. Westward from here the whole state is mountainous, with many fertile valleys between the ranges, some of them narrow and some of them wide; but from the eastern to the western boundary of the state the whole region is arid, with a very light rainfall, which averages about fourteen inches per annum in the vicinity of Denver; and farming by ordinary methods is not possible without irrigation. Evaporation is at all times very rapid, and dews almost unknown.

Recently a great many experiments have been conducted under what is known as the "Campbell System," which, briefly, means intensive cultivation and a retention of the moisture in the soil by continually keeping the surface in a pulverized condition, and thereby preventing evaporation. It is too early to speak with entire confidence as to results, though success has been achieved in many cases, and the striking results obtained may well carry a lesson for florists whose carnations are suffering from drought in the field.

The whole state is blessed with abundant sunshine, both in summer and in winter, and, except in the mountainous portions, the winter climate is mild, with but little snow. There is a wide daily range of temperature, nights being cool in summer and cold in winter. There is also a great difference between the temperature in the sun and in the shade, largely due to the absence of moisture in the atmosphere. Naturally, in a climate so widely different from the climate of the eastern states, problems arise peculiar to this locality.

Soil and Water.

In any arid region the vegetation is scanty, and this same condition has existed back during the countless years in which the surface soil was being formed. Consequently, the soil contains very little fiber and very little decayed wide, and has a total population of about 650,000. Denver, the principal city and capital of Colorado, with a population of about 200,000, is situated a little to the east and north of the center of the state. In traveling from Chicago to Denver, your journey would be a little longer than from Chicago to New York.

In going west from here by rail, you vegetable matter, but the soluble salts are apt to be present in large quantities, because there has been little water to dissolve them and wash them away. Some of these salts are beneficial and some of them are harmful. In many localities alkaline salts are present in such quantities as to make the soil utterly useless, and the water of the streams naturally partakes of the chemical qualities of the soil, so that in a great many cases the water is so badly impregnated as to be utterly unfit for use. Many florists in the arid region have failed because they neglected to investigate the quality of their water supply before deciding upon a location.

It is generally possible to find soil which will produce good roses in the field, but it is difficult to find it heavy enough to be satisfactory and at the same time porous enough to permit of heavy watering in the benches. Our heaviest soil, called adobe, formed from decomposed shale, is certain to contain alkali, and cracks very badly when dry; but by a careful selection of soil most growers are meeting with fairly satisfactory results, although there is still much to be desired and the ideal soil has not yet been obtained.

It is not an expensive or a difficult matter to secure a determination of the soluble salts in a sample of water, and the Agricultural Department will furnish valuable advice in such cases, if requested. When it comes to an analysis of the soil, the situation is very different, for then the problem becomes very complex, and what with soluble and insoluble food, moisture content, mechanical condition and nitrifying and denitrifying bacteria in numerous varieties, the layman searching for information becomes confused and is quite ready to agree with a recently published statement of Professor Corbett, to the effect that the plant itself must tell you by its action whether the soil is suitable. Yet even the soil sharps quarrel among themselves, and many of them claim that soil analysis is a safe guide. Your Illinois Experiment Station seems to be among the latter; and, more than that, they support their claims by results which lead us to hope that the present confusion will some day crystallize into tested and accepted methods, whereby the man in the laboratory may give wise counsel to both the man with the hoe and the one with the hose.

Composting in Colorado.

Owing to the exceedingly dry atmosphere and the light rainfall, it is very difficult to get good results from the composting of soil in Colorado. If sod is piled up, it does not rot, but dries out. If manure is mixed with the soil, its chemical condition remains unaltered for a long time. Some of our rose growers have, on that account, absolutely abandoned the use of manure in soil put into the benches, and all growers use it with great caution. When used as a top-dressing, it should be mixed with about an equal quantity of soil. It is safe to say that if a rose grower in Denver were to top-dress his benches with such quantities of green manure as are used in the vicinity of Chicago, he would hardly have a leaf left on any of his plants at the end of a week. We Denver growers are simply amazed at the impunity with which manure is used in this vicinity.

Among the ordinary evils which rose growers have to contend with, there are none of them which we do not have. The dry air seems to suit the red spider to perfection, but with our continual sunshine we are able to syringe the roses freely, without any bad effect. Black spot attacks the Beauties and hybrid teas to some extent, but is not nearly the scourge that it is in the east. Thrips are like the poor, and are always with us, though I cannot vouch for as many varieties as your Illinois Experiment Station claims; and the greenfly propagates as freely with us as elsewhere, but is eradicated long before we get rid of the thrips.

Prevalence of Mildew.

Mildew has been quite a problem with us in August and September. In the summer time our houses not infrequently show a temperature of 110 degrees, when they are not shaded, although it is rare indeed that the weather bureau reports any temperature above 95 degrees, and some of our September days are nearly as hot as midsummer. We frequently get a night temperature in June, July and August, of 45 degrees, with 6 or 7 degrees lower than that on rare occasions, and we expect a severe frost about the middle of September. At the place where I have charge, we keep steam in the boilers all through the summer, believing that it pays to do this as a protection against mildew; and yet, last summer we had a great deal of mildew, while one of our neighbors did not fire at all and his stock was perfectly clean. Owing to the dry air, one would naturally expect us to be free from this trouble, and I am not competent to say why we are not.

A number of years ago our tea roses were not producing well, and were not making a good growth. Investigation disclosed the presence of immense numbers of eel worms. Our dry climate and our mild winters seem to be just suited to the production of nematodes in the open ground. After a very thorough comparative test, we abandoned the growing of tea roses on their own roots, and have now, for a number of years, grown them only on Manetti. For a considerable time we sterilized the soil that we put in the benches, but this process has been abandoned, as the Manetti stocks have seemed to be perfectly immune. I believe that a large proportion of the tea roses grown in Colorado are now grown on Manetti stocks.

The growing of American Beauties on Manetti has been quite extensively tried, but the results have not seemed to be decisive either for or against this method, and the gain, if any, was so slight that all Beauties are now grown on their own roots.

Native Roses of the State.

So far as I know, none of our native roses have ever been used as stocks upon which to graft or bud roses for forcing or for garden use, and I presume the probabilities are against securing any good results, but the experiment ought to be worth trying. We have one or two native roses that are quite vigorous in their growth, and they are, doubtless, resistant to the evil effects of the alkaline salts so generally prevalent in the soil. Probably nothing but an actual test could determine how well they would respond to winter forcing, though the chances are that they would prove rebellious.

Dormant roses of all kinds are hard for us to handle. They are slow in making roots, and it requires careful handling to keep the wood from shriveling. Such roses as the Crimson Rambler are always in evidence in the stores at Easter time, but plants that are really well done are always scarce, and no grower can be absolutely certain of his results.

Our people, as a rule, are but just beginning to show a proper appreciation of garden roses and shrubbery, and within the last few years business in these lines has largely increased.

Owing to the peculiar climatic conditions already outlined, the growing of roses in the garden presents a great

BEST SIZE OF ROSE HOUSE.

[A paper by W. H. Elliott, Brighton, Mass., read before the American Rose Society at the Chicago convention, March 25 to 27.]

"What is the proper size of a greenhouse to grow roses for commercial purposes?" This is the question assigned to me. What I think is really wanted in this case is to know how large one really thinks a greenhouse should be built. My answer will be more on this line.

First, I wish to apologize for coming as an eastern man to the city of Chicago to answer a question of this kind, for, if there is anyone who knows how large greenhouses should be, it is the Chicago man. I can, however, give you an answer in few words.

One Big House.

A greenhouse, for commercial purposes, should be as large as a man has money to build. That is, whatever money he is going to invest in commercial houses might best be put in one house. I would not hesitate to put 150,000 feet under one roof. In fact, one could build a greenhouse to good advantage as long as it can be heated from one central station. One can heat 1,000 feet each way with a gravity system, provided you have a fall of ten feet from the radiating pipes to the water line of the boiler. With a vacuum system I presume they admit that the well constructed ridge and furrow ranges around Chicago are as fine houses as I would expect to see anywhere and I expect a strong argument in favor of that style from those using them.

The Wide Single Roof.

What influences me most in favor of the single roof is the snow. A roof that will clear itself of snow in midwinter, at a time when the days are short, and prices high, is certainly to be desired. Another advantage to the single house is that it is easier to fill and empty; also, that high houses are less expensive to heat. The variation of heat in the daytime is not so great. They should be easier to ventilate and handle. Larger amount of air space inside the greenhouse has proved to be an advantage rather than the disadvantage most growers supposed it would be. Mr. Holmes, in his address on rose culture before the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Boston, stated, as his opinion, that forty per cent of the improvement in rose growing in the last twenty years was due to the up-to-date greenhouse, and I think he was right. It is one of the facts that we must accept, that better stock can be grown in a large greenhouse than in a small one.

The Width.

In regard to the width: It is hard ness, but it is really not the width. It is the question of construction. If a house were thoroughly and properly constructed, could a house of this size be handled to advantage? I have not seen this wide house during the winter season. I have no idea how the stock is growing. I looked this house over thoroughly at the time of the convention last summer. It seemed to be considered an impracticable house, but the only reason given was the construction of the house. The question really is, if the house were strong and securely built, would a house of that kind grow good stock? I would say that in that house at the time I saw it, was growing as nice a lot of American Beauties as I could find anywhere. If the house will grow the stock, then that is really the vital question.

Economical Operation.

The next question is, can a house of that size be constructed and run as cheaply as a narrower house? There are a good many questions there that would need more knowledge and experience than I have to answer.

I cannot recommend the construction of houses of any such remarkable width. Sixty feet wide, with a pitch of six inches to the foot, I find to be thoroughly satisfactory. I would not hesitate to increase that width considerably, but, as soon as I increase that width, I must splice my bars, which I have not done on any of my large houses. Ventilation seems to be good. The air in these large, high houses always seems better than in the small ones. I do not quite understand why we need to ventilate greenhouses, except to reduce the heat.

Should the air in a greenhouse keep pure and good without being renewed? If not, what is it that spoils it, and should it not be much more serious in houses with much less air space?

Some Disadvantages.

I think it is only fair that I should state what seem to be the most serious drawbacks in the construction of these large houses. In the first place, the unequal expansion of ridge, purlins, plates and sills. It is also a long distance to drive around them with a cart-load of soil; leakage is increased if roofs are not kept in the best of repair. There is also great danger from the wind, in houses of this size. The movement of so large a body of air as is contained in these houses strains the glass much more from the inside than in the smaller houses. They need to be built strong and glazed thoroughly. I have made up my mind to double-nail the glass at the end of these houses.

Cost of Construction.

Horticultural builders charge more to cover the same ground with houses of this kind than they do with a number of smaller ones. They are right in this, for they need stronger and more thorough construction. I do not like the iron-frame with heavy rafters for this construction.

We must guard carefully against the enlarging of our houses without properly strengthening all parts. My first large houses were weak in the outside walls. Thorough and permanent construction is what is needed, for many reasons. Not alone on account of wind and weather, but because this business has grown to be permanent and important enough to have a place of its own and not built up with the idea that it will some day might be carried a great deal farther. Just how much, I could not say, as I have not used that system.

The continuous ridge and furrow houses need only be limited by the money to be laid out, as the heat could be carried 1,000 feet each way.

Much can be said in answer to the question of the advantages of the ridge and furrow houses as compared with the wide single roof. I shall speak in favor of the wide single roof, although I must be torn down and the land used for building purposes. A man building a factory does not have any such idea, and our establishment should be just as permanent, or more so, than any factory. A proper location should be selected with great care; then, get the best to do with and build thoroughly enough so that the place can be inherited by your children and grandchildren. The fact that the growing of cut roses as a business was born inside of the last fifty years is no reason to suppose it will die out inside of the same time.

While I am wandering away from the question, allow me to impress on you the importance of taking the best of care of your house when built, especially in regard to painting.

BOSTON SPRING FLOWER SHOW.

Better than ever, seemed to be the general verdict of the spring show just closed in Boston. While there was slight falling off in some departments, the improvement in others more than compensated for it, and the quality of the exhibits was unusually high. The arrangement was excellent and reflected great credit on the committee in charge. Probably the most striking feature of the whole show was the beautifully arranged group of R. & J. Farquhar & Co., which secured the rare distinction of a gold medal. Breaking away from stereotyped groupings, the Messrs. Farquhar produced a veritable flower garden of bold, irregular outline, the mounds of lily of the valley and white hyacinths being especially effective. For a background Areca lutescens, bays and Laurus nobilis were used. Candidum and longiflorum lilies were dotted irregularly in front of these with telling effect. An immense quantity of bulbous stock, also azaleas, ericas, acacias, ferns, Isolepis gracilis and other material was used. Not a pot could be seen, the plants all appearing to be growing naturally. White was the predominant color, a little only of yellow and soft pink being used.

A gold medal was also awarded to Walter Hunnewell, T. D. Hatfield gardener, for a splendid collection of hybrid amaryllis of Mr. Hatfield's raising. Plants of Cyrtomium falcatum were used as a groundwork to hide the pots. Harvard Botanic Gardens made an extensive display, well arranged. Mrs. J. L. Gardner, William Thatcher gardener, had almost a dozen fine specimens of chorizema well flowered. Thomas Roland had a table of genistas, trained in a variety of forms, also Lady Gay rose and Acacia longifolia. General S. M. Weld, Thomas Coles gardener, had a fine group of forced shrubs, bulbs, cinerarias, etc. Dr. C. G. Weld had a fine specimen of Rhododendron Alice Fitzwilliam, and Mrs. A. W. Blake, J. L. Smith gardener, a huge plant of Nephrolepis Barrowsii.

In the competitive classes there were numerous entries and the following were some of the leading prizes awarded: Pair of palms, first and third, Edward MacMulkin; second, Frederick Ayer, George Page gardener. The last named exhibitor was first for six ericas, specimen acacia and twelve acacias. Some of his best acacias were heterophylla, Drummondii, longifolia and pulehella. For six hard-wooded greenhouse plants other than ericas and azaleas, J. R. Leeson, James Cartwright gardener, had the best display. Cyclamens, as usual, made a fine showing. For twelve plants in not over 7-inch pots prizes went to Dr. C. G.

Rose Hiawatha Exhibited at Boston by M. H. Walsh.

Weld, W. A. Riggs and E. J. Mitton, J. Lawson gardener. For six plants in not over 10-inch pots the winners were Dr. C. G. Weld, Frederick Ayer and E. J. Mitton. William Whitman was first for six cinerarias, one cineraria and six Cineraria stellata, Mrs. Gardner being second for the last named.

Bulbous plants made an extensive display, the quality being first-class. For six pans of hyacinths, W. A. Riggs, W. Whitman and Mrs. J. L. Gardner were successful. For a single pan, first and second went to W. Whitman, third to Mrs. Gardner; fourth to A. F. Estabrook, George Barker gardener. For six pans tulips, W. A. Riggs, W. Whitman and Mrs. Gardner won in order named, while for three pans, W. Whitman, W. A. Riggs and A. F. Estabrook took the prizes. For six jonquils W. Whitman was first, Mrs. Gardner second, W. A. Riggs third. For collection large Trumpet narcissi, W. Whitman led, followed by Mrs. Gardner and A. F. Estabrook. W. Whitman and Mrs. Gardner had the best collections of short Trumpet narcissi. W. A. Riggs won the Rawson silver cup for the largest collection of narcissi grown by a private gardener. W. Whitman had first, as usual, for the best general display of bulbous plants, all classes.

For climbing roses, one specimen, M. H. Walsh was first with a magnificent plant of Delight, second with Areadia and third with Lady Gay. Mr. Walsh was also first for six ramblers in pots. For twelve hardy primroses Frederick Ayer, A. F. Estabrook and Mrs. Gardner took the prizes. The last named was first and second for schizanthus. For group of Easter plants, Edward MacMulkin was first and second. Mrs. Gardner had the best six amaryllis.

For group of orchids covering fifty square feet, Seth Borden, F. Varden gardener, was first. He also won for three specimen orchids, with excellent dendrobiums. For single specimen orchids, Mrs. J. L. Gardner won with Cattleya Schroederæ, Seth Borden second, Mrs. J. C. Whiten third. For six pans, first and third went to Miss M. A. Rand, second to H. A. Rand.

Cut roses made a smaller display than usual. For Bride, Eber Holmes won first and W. H. Elliott second. For Richmond, W. H. Elliott won, followed by Waban Conservatories and Eber Holmes. Any other variety, W. H. Elliott was first with Safrano. In the private gardeners' class, Dr. C. G. Weld was first for Bride and Bridesmaid.

There was, as usual, a good display of carnations. For vase of 100 blooms, S. J. Goddard won with fine Helen Goddard. The same exhibitor led for crimson with Harry Fenn; second, M. A. Patten with Harry Fenn; third, S. J. Goddard with Octoroon. C. S. Strout was first for daybreak pink with Enchantress; second, S. J. Goddard with Winsor; third, Patten with Winsor. Mrs. E. A. Mansfield led in the dark pink class with Lawson; second, W. Whitman with Lawson; third, S. J. Goddard with Helen Goddard. For scarlet, S. J. Goddard,

BEST SIZE OF ROSE HOUSE.

[A paper by W. H. Elliott, Brighton, Mass., read before the American Rose Society at the Chicago convention, March 25 to 27.]

"What is the proper size of a greenhouse to grow roses for commercial purposes?" This is the question assigned to me. What I think is really wanted in this case is to know how large one really thinks a greenhouse should be built. My answer will be more on this line.

First, I wish to apologize for coming as an eastern man to the city of Chicago to answer a question of this kind, for, if there is anyone who knows how large greenhouses should be, it is the Chicago man. I can, however, give you an answer in few words.

One Big House.

A greenhouse, for commercial purposes, should be as large as a man has money to build. That is, whatever money he is going to invest in commercial houses might best be put in one house. I would not hesitate to put 150,000 feet under one roof. In fact, one could build a greenhouse to good advantage as long as it can be heated from one central station. One can heat 1,000 feet each way with a gravity system, provided you have a fall of ten feet from the radiating pipes to the water line of the boiler. With a vacuum system I presume they admit that the well constructed ridge and furrow ranges around Chicago are as fine houses as I would expect to see anywhere and I expect a strong argument in favor of that style from those using them.

The Wide Single Roof.

What influences me most in favor of the single roof is the snow. A roof that will clear itself of snow in midwinter, at a time when the days are short, and prices high, is certainly to be desired. Another advantage to the single house is that it is easier to fill and empty; also, that high houses are less expensive to heat. The variation of heat in the daytime is not so great. They should be easier to ventilate and handle. Larger amount of air space inside the greenhouse has proved to be an advantage rather than the disadvantage most growers supposed it would be. Mr. Holmes, in his address on rose culture before the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Boston, stated, as his opinion, that forty per cent of the improvement in rose growing in the last twenty years was due to the up-to-date greenhouse, and I think he was right. It is one of the facts that we must accept, that better stock can be grown in a large greenhouse than in a small one.

The Width.

In regard to the width: It is hard

ness, but it is really not the width. It is the question of construction. If a house were thoroughly and properly constructed, could a house of this size be handled to advantage? I have not seen this wide house during the winter season. I have no idea how the stock is growing. I looked this house over thoroughly at the time of the convention last summer. It seemed to be considered an impracticable house, but the only reason given was the construction of the house. The question really is, if the house were strong and securely built, would a house of that kind grow good stock? I would say that in that house at the time I saw it, was growing as nice a lot of American Beauties as I could find anywhere. If the house will grow the stock, then that is really the vital question.

Economical Operation.

The next question is, can a house of that size be constructed and run as cheaply as a narrower house? There are a good many questions there that would need more knowledge and experience than I have to answer.

I cannot recommend the construction of houses of any such remarkable width. Sixty feet wide, with a pitch of six inches to the foot, I find to be thoroughly satisfactory. I would not hesitate to increase that width considerably, but, as soon as I increase that width, I must splice my bars, which I have not done on any of my large houses. Ventilation seems to be good. The air in these large, high houses always seems better than in the small ones. I do not quite understand why we need to ventilate greenhouses, except to reduce the heat.

Should the air in a greenhouse keep pure and good without being renewed? If not, what is it that spoils it, and should it not be much more serious in houses with much less air space?

Some Disadvantages.

I think it is only fair that I should state what seem to be the most serious drawbacks in the construction of these large houses. In the first place, the unequal expansion of ridge, purlins, plates and sills. It is also a long distance to drive around them with a cart-load of soil; leakage is increased if roofs are not kept in the best of repair. There is also great danger from the wind, in houses of this size. The movement of so large a body of air as is contained in these houses strains the glass much more from the inside than in the smaller houses. They need to be built strong and glazed thoroughly. I have made up my mind to double-nail the glass at the end of these houses.

Cost of Construction.

Horticultural builders charge more to cover the same ground with houses of this kind than they do with a number of smaller ones. They are right in this, for they need stronger and more thorough construction. I do not like the iron-frame with heavy rafters for this construction.

We must guard carefully against the enlarging of our houses without properly strengthening all parts. My first large houses were weak in the outside walls. Thorough and permanent construction is what is needed, for many reasons. Not alone on account of wind and weather, but because this business has grown to be permanent and important enough to have a place of its own and not built up with the idea that it will some day might be carried a great deal farther. Just how much, I could not say, as I have not used that system.

The continuous ridge and furrow houses need only be limited by the money to be laid out, as the heat could be carried 1,000 feet each way.

Much can be said in answer to the question of the advantages of the ridge and furrow houses as compared with the wide single roof. I shall speak in favor of the wide single roof, although I must be torn down and the land used for building purposes. A man building a factory does not have any such idea, and our establishment should be just as permanent, or more so, than any factory. A proper location should be selected with great care; then, get the best to do with and build thoroughly enough so that the place can be inherited by your children and grandchildren. The fact that the growing of cut roses as a business was born inside of the last fifty years is no reason to suppose it will die out inside of the same time.

While I am wandering away from the question, allow me to impress on you the importance of taking the best of care of your house when built, especially in regard to painting.

BOSTON SPRING FLOWER SHOW.

Better than ever, seemed to be the general verdict of the spring show just closed in Boston. While there was slight falling off in some departments, the improvement in others more than compensated for it, and the quality of the exhibits was unusually high. The arrangement was excellent and reflected great credit on the committee in charge. Probably the most striking feature of the whole show was the beautifully arranged group of R. & J. Farquhar & Co., which secured the rare distinction of a gold medal. Breaking away from stereotyped groupings, the Messrs. Farquhar produced a veritable flower garden of bold, irregular outline, the mounds of lily of the valley and white hyacinths being especially effective. For a background Arca lutescens, bays and Laurus nobilis were used. Candidum and longidorum lilies were dotted irregularly in front of these with telling effect. An immense quantity of bulbous stock, also azaleas, ericas, acacias, ferns, Isolepis gracilis and other material was used. Not a pot could be seen, the plants all appearing to be growing naturally. White was the predominant color, a little only of yellow and soft pink being used.

A gold medal was also awarded to Walter Hunnewell, T. D. Hatfield gardener, for a splendid collection of hybrid amaryllis of Mr. Hatfield's raising. Plants of Cyrtomium falcatum were used as a groundwork to hide the pots. Harvard Botanic Gardens made an extensive display, well arranged. Mrs. J. L. Gardner, William Thatcher gardener, had almost a dozen fine specimens of chorizema well flowered. Thomas Roland had a table of genistas, trained in a variety of forms, also Lady Gay rose and Acacia longifolia. General S. M. Weld, Thomas Coles gardener, had a fine group of forced shrubs, bulbs, cinerarias, etc. Dr. C. G. Weld had a fine specimen of Rhododendron Alice Fitzwilliam, and Mrs. A. W. Blake, J. L. Smith gardener, a huge plant of Nephrolepis Barrowsii.

In the competitive classes there were numerous entries and the following were some of the leading prizes awarded: Pair of palms, first and third, Edward Mac-Mulkin; second, Frederick Ayer, George Page gardener. The last named exhibitor was first for six ericas, specimen acacia and twelve acacias. Some of his best acacias were heterophylla, Drummondii, longifolia and pulchella. For six hard wooded greenhouse plants other than ericas and azaleas, J. R. Leeson, James Cartwright gardener, had the best display. Cyclamens, as usual, made a fine showing. For twelve plants in not over 7 inch pots prizes went to Dr. C. G.

Rose Hiawatha Exhibited at Boston by M. H. Walsh.

Weld, W. A. Riggs and E. J. Mitton, J. Lawson gardener. For six plants in not over 10 inch pots the winners were Dr. C. G. Weld, Frederick Ayer and E. J. Mitton. William Whitman was first for six cinerarias, one cineraria and six Cineraria stellata, Mrs. Gardner being second for the last named.

Bulbous plants made an extensive display, the quality being first class. For six pans of hyacinths, W. A. Riggs, W. Whitman and Mrs. J. L. Gardner were successful. For a single pan, first and second went to W. Whitman, third to Mrs. Gardner; fourth to A. F. Estabrook, George Barker gardener. For six pans tulips, W. A. Riggs, W. Whitman and Mrs. Gardner won in order named, while for three pans, W. Whitman, W. A. Riggs and A. F. Estabrook took the prizes. For six jonquils W. Whitman was first, Mrs. Gardner second, W. A. Riggs third. For collection large Trumpet narcissi, W. Whitman led, followed by Mrs. Gardner and A. F. Estabrook. W. Whitman and Mrs. Gardner had the best collections of short Trumpet narcissi. W. A. Riggs won the Rawson silver cup for the largest collection of narcissi grown by a private gardener. W. Whitman had first, as usual, for the best general display of bulbous plants, all classes.

For climbing roses, one specimen, M. H. Walsh was first with a magnificent plant of Delight, second with Arcadia and third with Lady Gay. Mr. Walsh was also first for six ramblers in pots. For twelve hardy primroses Frederick Ayer, A. F. Estabrook and Mrs. Gardner took the prizes. The first named was first and second for schizanthus. For group of Easter plants, Edward Mac-Mulkin was first and second. Mrs. Gardner had the best six amaryllis.

For group of orchids covering fifty square feet, Seth Borden, F. Varden gardener, was first. He also won for three specimen orchids, with excellent dendrobiums. For single specimen orchids, Mrs. J. L. Gardner won with Cattleya Schroderae, Seth Borden second, Mrs. J. C. Whiten third. For six pans, first and third went to Miss M. A. Rand, second to H. A. Rand.

Cut roses made a smaller display than usual. For Bride, Elber Holmes won first and W. H. Elliott second. For Richmond, W. H. Elliott won, followed by Waban Conservatories and Elber Holmes. Any other variety, W. H. Elliott was first with Safrano. In the private gardeners' class, Dr. C. G. Weld was first for Bride and Bridesmaid.

There was, as usual, a good display of carnations. For vase of 100 blooms, S. J. Goddard won with fine Helen Goddard. The same exhibitor led for crimson with Harry Penn; second, M. A. Patten with Harry Penn; third, S. J. Goddard with Octoroon. C. S. Strout was first for daybreak pink with Enchantress; second, S. J. Goddard with Winsor; third, Patten with Winsor. Mrs. E. A. Munfield led in the dark pink class with Lawson; second, W. Whitman with Lawson; third, S. J. Goddard with Helen Goddard. For scarlet, S. J. Goddard,

M. A. Patten and C. S. Strout captured the prizes, all showing Victory. Lady Bountiful, from S. J. Goddard, led in whites; second, C. S. Strout with White Perfection; third, S. J. Goddard, with White Perfection. Variegated, first, Backer & Co., with Mrs. Patten; second, Patten, with variegated Lawson.

Edward MacMulkin had the best six azaleas, Mrs. E. M. Gill and Mrs. A. W. Blake the best forty-eight pansies. For 100 double violets, H. F. Woods won with Campbell; second, H. F. Calder, with Campbell. For 100 single, William Sim was first and second and Estey Bros. third. For two vases, 100 spikes each, of sweet peas, William Sim was in the clear during the show. The attendance was larger than ever and visitors from a distance were numerous.

POT ROSES FOR EASTER.

[A paper by Robert Craig, of Philadelphia, read before the American Rose Society at Chicago, March 25 to 27.]

The principal obstacle in the way of having fine specimen roses at Easter lies in the difficulty of obtaining sufficiently strong plants. In roses of the Crimson Rambler and Wichuraiana types, strong canes can be had by planting out in the open ground in heavy soil, well manured, and leaving the plants out at

of the varieties. Among other good Easter hybrids for pots (I know of but few) may be mentioned Mrs. John Laing; Ulrich Brunner (of fine color, but a poor keeper), Rodocanachie, Mlle. Gabriel Luizet, Gen. Jacqueminot and Kil-larney. If sufficiently strong canes of the latter can be had it is one of the most attractive, but these varieties do not make strong plants on their own roots in the open ground, especially in the northern states.

Importing Stock.

For such varieties as cannot be obtained from nurserymen in this country, recourse must be had to importing the strongest plants possible from Europe in the fall, preferably from England or Ireland, budded low on Manetti. Those from Holland are generally budded too high on the stock to make attractive pot plants.

Plants which are packed for shipment should have their roots surrounded by damp moss, and should be exposed to the air as little as possible from time of lifting until they are potted. Many failures result from lack of this precaution.

The plants should not be lifted until they have had some frost to thoroughly ripen the wood. In the latitude of Philadelphia this is usually from the middle to the latter part of November. I have never been able to get, however, plants uniformly strong enough to force them the first season after importing. The plants are not graded into sizes and many sent are too small to make suitable plants the first season after importing.

It is our custom to take only the stronger plants, and the others are wintered over as cheaply as possible in cold-frames or houses, to be grown in pots the following summer, which treatment greatly benefits them.

Pot Culture Preferable.

The Crimson Rambler, if carefully handled, will make as fine plants the first season from open ground, but the other varieties will bloom more freely if grown in pots one season.

The cost of wintering imported plants in frames is about $50 per thousand, and the cost of growing them through the summer about $50 per thousand additional, but the improvement in the character of the plants fully justifies the expense, for Easter purposes.

Air should be given during the winter whenever the weather is mild enough, and every precaution taken to prevent the lead with magnificent Florence Denzer and Christmas Pink. Mr. Sim also staged a superb collection of other Zvolanek varieties. Of these W. W. Smalley and Mrs. Alex Wallace received first-class certificates. For twelve camellias, Miss J. M. Sears was first.

Other miscellaneous exhibits included Carnation Afterglow from William Nicholson and Carnation Bay State from A. Roper, each awarded a silver medal. Elijah A. Wood received a certificate of merit for his scarlet seedling, Mrs. George A. Frost. W. A. Manda was awarded honorable mention for his dark pink seedling No. 24 and the same award for Asparagus elongatus. F. C. Green received honorable mention for pink Roman Hyacinth Excelsior; W. W. Rawson the same for Lobelia Kathleen Mallard, M. H. Walsh for new rose Celeste, H. A. Dreer for Marguerite Blush Queen Alexandra, and W. W. Rawson for Anchusa Italica Dropmore.

J. E. Rothwell had a splendid display of cut orchids, filling 200 bottles. M. H. Walsh received a silver medal for his new rambler rose, Arcadia, and a first-class certificate for Excelsa. Mrs. E. M. Gill had a nice general display. William Downs received a cultural certificate for yellow antirrhinums and H. L. Smith a similar award for Nephrolepis Barrowsii. T. D. Hatfield had half a dozen nice plants of the golden yellow chrysanthemum, Evening Star. R. T. Kimball showed fine antirrhinums and Lager & Hurrell their usual interesting table of orchids. In the vegetable department F. E. Cole received a silver medal for a display of forced vegetables.

The weather was cold but generally least one winter. When they are left out for two winters they make extra strong plants, with long, strong canes, suitable for training into large specimens.

Best Varieties.

Magna Charta, which is undoubtedly the best of all the hybrid roses as an Easter pot plant, may be treated in like manner. This also applies to Clothilde Soupert, which is deserving of special mention on account of its freedom of bloom, distinct color, and above all, its good keeping qualities. It may be kept, in a cool house, for two weeks in full bloom, which cannot be said of many tops from growing as long as possible. After the young roots have started they should not be allowed to freeze, as they are thus easily killed. The pots should stand on a dry bottom and be packed in leaves, sawdust, ashes or other suitable material.

New Sorts.

The Crimson Rambler has been for many years a popular Easter plant, but its popularity is waning; it will still be grown, but in smaller quantities than formerly, but fortunately there are a number of climbers that may be grown profitably, and which have the charm of novelty. Among the best are Lady Gay, Dorothy Perkins, Tausendschon and Hiawatha. The last named is especially charming; although the bloom looks frail, it is a fine keeper, and I look for it to increase in popularity. The new variety, Newport Fairy, will, undoubtedly, be largely grown when its merits become known. Another very fine one is Mr. Walsh's Juniata, and no doubt there are other hybrids in the Wichuraiana section which I have not had the opportunity of seeing.

Culture.

The culture of pot roses for Easter is simple, but there are certain rules as to temperature, airing, and the prevention or destruction of insects, which must be faithfully followed. The soil should be a clay loam enriched with well decomposed stable manure, and I like to add a liberal sprinkling of bone dust and fine sheep manure; the latter gives the foliage a rich, dark color.

The plants should be carefully and very firmly potted, using a potting stick to pack the soil about the roots. It is well to shade the house either with slats or by whitewashing the glass with whiting and coal oil, and sprinkle frequently with water to keep the wood plump until the young roots start; they should never be allowed to shrivel. Keep for five or six weeks in a night temperature of 40 to 45 degrees. The plants should by this time be well rooted and the temperature may be gradually increased, if necessary, to 60 or 65 degrees at night.

When we have a late Easter, as this year, it may be at no time necessary to exceed 60 degrees. The lower the temperature at which they can be flowered in time, the better.

Crimson Rambler and Wichuraiana roses may be trained in various shapes, globular, oval, or in the form of fans, etc.; or, they may be cut back to about one foot from the pots and grown without any stacking. In these severely cut back plants the clusters of flowers will be larger than where more of the wood is retained and the lighter branches allowed to bloom.

Use tobacco stems between the pots to keep down insects, cleaning out and removing about once a month. Give always plenty of air if weather permits. If this is regularly attended to, mildew is not likely to appear, and when the buds are set an occasional watering, say once in two weeks, with manure water is beneficial. Soot water is also excellent to improve the foliage and color of blooms and serves also to destroy worms.

To recapitulate, I should say the principal points to be observed are: Lift carefully, pot promptly and firmly, start at low temperature, always as much air as possible, use tobacco stems between the pots, which should have some space between them from the start.

THE RETAIL

FLORIST.....

THE ROSE AT RETAIL.

[Synopsis of a paper by J. F. Sullivan, Detroit, read before the American Rose Society at Chicago, March 25 to 27.]

The present great extent of the rose trade was developed by many contributing factors, but I believe the chief of these were the pioneer retail florists, who, in their time, were the first to realize the commercial possibilities of the queen of flowers. To these men is due the honor of having appreciated the full worth of the rose, and laid the foundation of its illustrious career. They loved the rose, and had faith in its future, and no unfavorable circumstance deterred them in advancing the prestige of their adopted flower, nor from courageously asking a price for it commensurate with its actual value as determined by the cost of production.

The Rose the Leader.

And here is suggested the inquiry: Why have the retailers in the early days of floriculture, and continuing to the present time, selected the rose as the basic element in their business careers? Why have they continued to maintain the rose most conspicuously before their trade? Why are so many florists today, while not ignoring the increasing value of many other branches of the business, making roses a specialty and succeeding in their efforts to permanently popularize them? Because the retailers wisely view the rose as their chief asset in merchandising. Without it, their places would be devoid of the essential attractiveness and proper equipment of a flower store. The florists realize that in no other stock of cut flowers can they operate with the same degree of immunity from possible loss that the rose gives them. They can, as every florist well knows, stock up with a supply of tight buds, which being at once salable, continue to actually improve on their hands for several days, more or less, according to the season and varieties, before they begin to decline, and even then they are just about in the right condition for that funeral design, for which he wisely suggests them. For shipping long distances, no flower is more suitable or certain of satisfactory results, viewed alone upon its splendid keeping qualities. Retailers of the seaboard cities use roses almost exclusively in their steamer trade.

I am reminded of the case of some blooms of the Richmond rose, being shown at a meeting of the Detroit Florists' Club three years ago. The same flowers, after being kept in a refrigerator, were shown at the exhibition of the American Carnation Society in Chicago eight days later. This trait of cut roses commends it to the retailer and to his customer, and also when the question of the dealer's supply is considered, as the rose can be shipped to him if necessary by his grower situated far away, and the availability of the rose in all seasons adds great value to his chief commodity in stock.

Appropriate in all Places.

On no occasion of the many where flowers of some kind are used is the rose ever considered unsuitable or inappropriate. Indeed, were the rose eliminated from retail floriculture, the cavity would be so great it would be difficult to properly identify it. Keeping pace with the evolution of the rose came the improved methods in decorations. Other flowers may in their respective seasons find a measure of favor, usefulness and even popularity with the lovers of the beautiful in nature, and in decorations you may mix them in an incongruous mass without doing great violence to their individual character, but the rose alone cries out pleadingly for a position of isolation where, unaided by associates, ribbons, ferns or other accessories, the rare, unrivaled splendor and magnificence of its decorative effect are most pleasing and appreciable.

The Call for Novelty.

Retailers deplore the seeming indifference of many growers in the important matter of providing them with more of the novelties in roses, the necessity for which is most apparent. So pronounced and general is this interest, and indeed eagerness, of the rose patrons to satisfy their delights in new varieties, that I venture to say that if some of the once favorite roses that are now relegated almost to oblivion, and which the so-called up-to-date grower of these times would disdain to grow, were resurrected, they would find a ready market and many warm, appreciative friends among rose enthusiasts. As an example I might cite the case of old Bon Silene, which is now grown in some quarters and is meeting with an encouraging demand. And in considering the adoption of varieties to meet this changing taste of the people, it is well to remember that it is not the size alone that constitutes the chief elements in a beautiful and most acceptable rose, as is clearly and constantly shown by even the most fastidious patrons of the retail stores while making their selections.

The public is craving for novelty—something different from the monotonous few varieties. Any of the older varieties are sufficiently attractive to the casual buyer, but the steady patrons, who are our most valuable ones, must be shown something new to hold their continued and increasing interest in our chief commodity. As an evidence of this tendency on the part of a large portion of the flower lovers, for variety and novelties, witness the increasing interest shown by them the last two or three years in the dainty pompon and anemone chrysanthemums, and often by identically the same persons who formerly sought the largest specimens of that flower at the time obtainable. How eagerly would the rose enthusiasts today seek the beautiful hybrid roses, as they were formerly grown, if they were now available!

The Story of Killarney.

As an illustration of the respective attitudes of the retailers and many growers I will cite the case of Killarney, a variety the superior merits of which are now universally conceded. Witness its struggle for the recognition deserved.

Soon after the Killarney's introduction in this country, about nine years ago, a few growers experimented with it in a limited way. The keen, well-trained eyes of the retailers, who by chance came into possession of the cut blooms, recognized instinctively their rare beauty and prospective value, and true to the enterprising methods that had already gained for them a big rose trade, they soon acquainted their customers with the distinctive finished beauty of the novelty, the supply of which is as yet limited. The increasing popularity of this variety and the consequent demand for it kept much in advance of the supply, which fortunately improved rapidly in the hands of but a few growers. Retailers everywhere urged more growers to plant it. The latter, nevertheless, were distrustful, and persistently refused to give it a fair trial, and in this case, as in many others, totally ignored the advice of the man behind the counter.

Some Things Needed.

The growers' indifference to the constant pleadings of the retailers to awaken to the importance of growing varieties that would be particularly available in the summer season has delayed inexcusably the full development of the lucrative trade for both grower and dealer that is attainable during this period. The present growers cannot justify their lethargy in the past in this respect by the absence in commerce, as they allege, of such varieties as will by their productiveness, color and quality commend them for the purpose named.

The retailers often wonder what would be the extent of the commercial importance and increased popularity of the rose were it not for its present prohibitory price to the masses, which operates to its disadvantage, commercially speaking. With that barrier removed appear to them visions of acres of glass being annually added to the existing large area now devoted to its culture, and the additions of thousands of florists engaged in this healthful and profitable industry, and in view of the vast strides made by hybridizers in recent years, may we not reasonably expect that a type of roses can yet be brought out which, in addition to the quality of the cut flowers will also be sufficiently productive to allow them to be sold at a price that will place them in the hands of the masses, and their popularity thus extended to the full gratification of every lover of the rose; and this blessing may by the same process be extended to the multitudes of homes where outdoor culture of the rose is possible were the suitable varieties available.

How frequently on our premises the prospective buyer, who is viewing with delight a splendid blooming plant of, we shall say Frau Karl Druschki, asks if it is hardy! We proudly answer in the affirmative and prepare to take an order. When again questioned, "Will it bloom again this season?" we reluctantly answer in the negative, as we see our prospective sale fade away. There is where we are deficient. We have not yet adjusted our productions to the actual requirements of the people we attempt to serve. We cannot expect the public to purchase and be satisfied with such varieties that even in the hands of skilled florists will not succeed under similar conditions.

American Beauty.

Society has, as a result of a combination of circumstances, aided by the florists themselves, forced the American Beauty to a position of prominence that seems at times to discourage the hybridizer in his endeavor to produce a successful rival to that famous variety, but, as every retailer knows, that variety at times is anything but a real beauty. Personally, I should prefer to see half of the glass at present devoted to Beauty given to a few of our leading sorts, and a further extension of our present list of forcing varieties to include those particularly reliable for summer blooming, but in this position I fully realize that I am in danger of standing almost alone.

But it is a well known fact that no longer are retailers embarrassed when they are unable to answer the call of the critical rose customer for American Beauty if they are prepared to offer Richmond as a substitute, or its worthy and popular companion, Killarney. Indeed, these are now often preferred to Beauty, irrespective of the cost. When we reflect upon the dismal failures attending the attempts of some growers with Beauties we are moved to pity and regret that the same glass and efforts were not devoted to other varieties which would be most certain to yield better if not entirely satisfactory results.

LILIES LOSING FOLIAGE.

The lower leaves on my lily plants are turning yellow and dropping off. The Harrisii seem to be affected the worst. They are nice, strong plants, from one and one-half to two feet high, full of buds and otherwise in fine condition. Will you kindly suggest the reason for this and help me to find a remedy?

G. A. T.

You cannot well prevent your lilies losing a few of the bottom leaves, but too little water and crowding the plants are fertile causes of this trouble. Keep your lilies well watered, and if the drainage is good and you spread them out so that the leaves of the plants do not touch each other, and get good light among them, you should have little further yellowing of the leaves.

Feeding by Top-dressing.

As soon as the bulk of propagation is over, the matter of restoring the somewhat exhausted bench soil can be taken up.

I do not wish to imply that nothing should have been added up to this time, for circumstances are often such that light applications of either air-slaked lime, bone meal or other fertilizing material are necessary during the winter, but the so-called operation of feeding we think best to defer until the propagating season is over. Plants are then showing the marked effect of the sun's increasing power, in rapid, vigorous growth. To support this growth, and at the same time maintain quality of bloom, it becomes necessary to place within reach an ample supply of plant food. Hence we have come to use the term feeding, though in reality we are studying to gratify the appetite of our plants at all times.

Providing the soil was of good quality at the start, any varieties which for any reason have given but small returns during the winter months, will not be benefited by this operation. Under this head I would include small, late benched plants and those recovering from the effects of disease or insect pests.

Use of Liquid Manure.

A few years ago the practice was to feed with liquid manure, and I will not say now that good results cannot be obtained by this method, though we have come to prefer feeding by top-dressing. Close observation has convinced me that plants which give but one crop in a year—chrysanthemums, for example—lend themselves more readily to the plan of supplying food in liquid form than do those classed as continuous bloomers.

Various substances are used in preparing material for top-dressing, the principal ones being bone meal, hardwood ashes, soot, and manure from the cow, sheep or hen, but it is important that knowledge be had of their make-up, source and manner of handling previous to use. While it is desirable to include the whole list to afford variety, it is by no means necessary. Secure those readily obtained in your locality. In another paper will be explained our method of using.

WORMS ON CARNATIONS.

In the REVIEW of February 27, E. C. wants to know of a remedy for worms on carnations. If he will set a light in the carnation house at night, he will catch the miller that lays the eggs which produce the worms. Or he might set a light in a dishpan containing a couple of inches of water. I tried picking worms, but did not make any headway until I caught the millers which lay the eggs.

Injury From Rapid Evaporation.

During the last week we have been having weather of the kind which is the most trying on the cuttings in the bench of all the various brands we are treated to each spring. The days have been bright and the sun has been quite warm and, with a brisk wind a-blowing, evaporation is very rapid. During such spells whole batches of cuttings are frequently lost, if the propagator has not full control of his cutting bench or if he is the least bit careless or inexperienced. During such times it keeps the best of us guessing what to do to hold them up in a fresh condition without going to extremes.

Most of the carnations for next season's planting should be rooted or very nearly so by this time, to give the very best results, but you may have a belated batch of some varieties and a few pointers regarding precautions during such spells as we have been having will not be amiss. The point is to overcome or prevent this rapid evaporation, as that is what does the damage. The temperature does not rise high enough to do any damage this early in the year, as long as the atmosphere is well charged with moisture. Your curtain will keep off the sun, but you will find that more is needed. Additional spraying might help, but it will not prove sufficient usually, and if it is increased enough to hold up the cuttings during the day the cuttings will likely remain damp over night and other troubles will soon develop. The best thing we have found is to lay newspapers directly on the cuttings, besides using the regular curtain, as usual, to keep the sun off. The papers are laid on about 9 o'clock, when the atmosphere begins to feel the effects of the wind and sun, and are left on until toward evening, when evaporation is slower again. You will find that one spraying in the morning will be sufficient, as enough moisture will arise from the moist sand to keep the cuttings fresh, providing it is arrested by these papers as suggested. Never allow the cuttings to be unprotected by curtain or paper, or both, when the ventilators are open more than three inches. No draughts of air should ever be allowed to strike them.

Cuttings taken from the sand from now on, if they are potted into 2½-inch pots, can stand in those pots without being shifted until planting-out time; 2-inch pots would hardly carry them in good condition if the cuttings are strong. Cuttings potted previous to March 10, however, should be shifted as early in April as possible, unless they are ready earlier. That will give them time to become established and to gather that extra strength which means fine plants for early planting. Keep them topped and clean of all insects, weeds, etc., even more diligently than you do with your old plants, for obvious reasons.

CONTINUOUS BLOOMING.

In the REVIEW of March 12, A. F. J. B. speaks of making carnations, in the same house, crop at different times. Will you please tell me how this is done?

E. H.

It is a well-known fact among carnation growers that by carefully and correctly topping the young plants in the field the plants can be gotten into a condition in which they will bear flowering shoots in all stages, and will, if handled properly after housing, give a succession of blooms covering a long period instead of throwing a heavy crop of short duration. This, of course, cannot be done with all varieties with equal success, as some are better adapted than others. Varieties which naturally come into bloom late cannot be induced to bloom early and steadily.

This treatment must begin in the field, as soon as the plants begin to bush out. Instead of going over the plants and topping back every shoot that will bear topping, take off only the most forward ones, and go over them a second or third time, after four or five days' interval, and take off the most forward ones again. By so doing you will get a succession of breaks instead of a big lot of breaks simultaneously. Great care must be exercised, however, at housing time, else all your work will be undone. The tendency is to take off every shoot at that time which has begun to run up, and that is where the mistake comes in. Leave these shoots on. This transplanting causes a check to every shoot on the plant and when growth is resumed they all come together and there is not the difference between them which there was before the disturbance took place. By leaving those longer shoots on and topping them when growth has been resumed, you again get your succession of breaks as you had them before.

You will find much less tendency to crop among plants which are housed early than you do among late housed stock, if too much topping is not done after housing. That is why I advise allowing the plants to bloom after they are re-established, even if you have no sale for the blooms. We had a splendid illustration of this on our place last year, 1906-1907. We planted a batch of some 300 plants of a seedling variety about August 1. Later, about September 15, we planted another batch of the same variety, of equal number of plants. The last batch carried many flower shoots and buds, which were removed when brought in. The first batch came into bloom early in September and bloomed continuously through the season, while the late planted batch was always either in heavy crop or away off crop. This season we planted the same variety about the middle of August and it has been in steady crop all winter.

Of course the cut is never so heavy as it would be at times if the plants had been made to bloom in crops. You will find, however, that the blooms will run of higher average quality than where the plants bloom in crops. We notice this especially in Enchantress and its sports. We have had Enchantress come in crops and have had them carry as heavy crop as anyone could wish to see, making a grand sight when in full bloom. We found that the first half or two-thirds of the crop would average good, but the last third would contain more weak stems than strong ones and the blooms would compare likewise. You will not find this condition when the plants carry only a fair quantity of buds along with a succession of shoots to bring a steady cut. Of course, this will not overcome those gluts which are brought on by spells of warm, bright weather during the winter, when cold weather should prevail, nor the scarcities which result from prolonged cloudy weather or those following a glut, as often happens. But even in such cases the trouble will not become so severe.

POSITION OF HOUSES.

I am building a range of even-span, connected greenhouses, containing about 12,000 square feet of glass, to be used for growing carnations and a general stock for retail trade, and I should like to know whether the houses should run north and south or east and west.

E. H. O.

In view of the fact that you are located in Wisconsin, in what we usually term the north, I would say by all means run your houses east and west. There is no doubt in the minds of most growers that up here the best results are obtained in houses built that way. You get more light when light is at a premium, during the winter, and that is the most important point to be considered in greenhouse building. I would advise you to raise your gutters high enough so that the shade from them will not be so dense by the time it strikes the plants, and by placing your walks properly you can make the shade strike the walks when the sun is the lowest. The gutters should be about six feet high. That allows the light to get under them, even though it may not be sun-rays.

In the south, where the sun does not go so low as here and where light is more abundant, north and south houses can be used to better advantage than here. I have heard it stated that during the extreme heat in summer they can be kept cooler than the others, but I cannot say from experience with such houses.

COMMERCIAL ROSE GROWING.

[A paper by W. H. Elliott, Boston, read before the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Boston, March 17, 1908.]

How are they grown? Why do we succeed? Why do we fail? These are the first questions we would like to have answered, which, however, have never been fully answered, and to which I can only give a very indefinite answer at best.

The practical questions are more as follows: In regard to propagation, grafted or own-root plants; proper care of young stock; soil; fertilization; watering; temperature and ventilation. These have all been answered many times and generally in much the same way. I have no better answer than has been made before. We all know how roses should be grown. It is not the lack of knowledge that causes our failure, but the lack of attention. We must never let up for a minute in our care and attention, from the time propagation begins up to the end. It means twenty-four hours a day and seven days a week that they require the best that we can give to them.

A Partnership Basis.

We must also remember that even if we call ourselves rose growers, we can only produce roses on a partnership basis. No man can grow a rose; that must be done by the other partner, who is the Lord in this case, and it is well to remember this fact and give Him the credit that is due Him. In a partnership of this kind, tricks and secrets will not avail. A simple, square, fair deal all around is what is necessary, and we must never forget that it takes a thousand things to make success, while only one will make a failure. As I said before, you must never let up. You must pay the price if you are to get the best. This whole subject was summed up years ago by that great lover of roses, Reynolds Hole, when he said, "Eternal vigilance is the price of good roses." I would like to firmly imprint on the brain of every rose grower this great principle—eternal vigilance. This is the principle on which I have worked. I have no secrets that I consider too good to give to the most humble rose grower.

The Grower With One Idea.

It is my opinion that the greatest mistake made in growing roses is in pinning too much faith on one particular idea. It is one man's opinion that a certain kind of fertilizer accounts for all the success, while another man has equal faith in soil sterilization. We all pin too much faith on soil and too little on air and water. Why do people grow healthy in the country? Certainly not on account of the good soil. Air and water have much more to do with it. Fertilizers are really our great stumbling blocks and cause more failure than anything else. As I said before, it takes a thousand things to make success and we all know equally well what they are. No amount of knowledge can make up for a haphazard method of handling the rose plants. You must do your very best, and, just so far as possible, keep up to date in everything in connection with the business, and be equipped as thoroughly as possible with the best. Don't complain if your burdens are heavy, because it is only with those that the great prizes come and our greatest successes lead us to greater opportunities and more burdens.

SOIL AND THE FLORIST

ADAPTATION OF SOILS.

[Synopsis of a paper by Gustavus B. Maynadler, of the United States Department of Agriculture, read before the American Rose Society at Chicago, March 25 to 27, 1908.]

The whole work of the Department of Agriculture is apportioned, according to the character of the problem, among the various bureaus of which the Department is made up, one of these being the Bureau of Soils.

In a majority of the cases observed by the Bureau it was found that varieties not only were better suited to certain soils, but that the class of soils specially adapted for their growth was similar to that upon which the variety was developed.

This is because the plant is in no sense a fixed, unchangeable organism, restricted to a definite form. On the contrary, it is highly plastic, capable of being changed or modified in all of its parts. We can by cultural methods alone effect many changes, and it is just as certain that as many more will occur through natural agencies. The effect of climate, the character of the soil, whether dry or moist, sandy or clay, all exert an influence tending to change or modify plant characters.

We see, then, that in the development of varieties the effect of soil is manifested, and to keep it up to the ideal established by the originator it is necessary to provide an environment quite similar to that in which it was developed. Yet originators of new varieties seldom think it necessary to mention the class of soils upon which the varieties were produced, never perhaps considering the influence that it may exert upon the future of the plants. And I believe that many new varieties, which are introduced only to be as suddenly cast aside, disappeared from cultivation because their habit is such that there are but few soils really well adapted to their culture.

Mysterious Forces in the Soil.

In the soil we have not only the supply of mineral plant food, but seemingly there are in it also forces, not yet understood, that exert a powerful influence on the habits of the plant, controlling to a great extent its thrift, characteristics and fruitfulness. And the effect of this influence appears whether the plant is cultivated for its foliage, its flowers or its seed.

In a change of environment may or may not be included a change of climatic conditions. A change of soil-type alone has been shown to be quite sufficient to bring about changes in the plant that in many instances are so marked as to greatly affect many varietal characteristics.

If with our field and garden crops, where the climatic influences have necessarily such a wide variation, the soil proves itself to be so important in maintaining varietal characteristics and habits, is it not reasonable to suppose that with indoor conditions, where these factors are under control, the relative influence of the soil is increased?

From my own observations and from the testimony of others, I believe this to be the case.

It is this phase of soil adaptation that concerns the indoor grower and which is now being investigated, particularly in regard to the soils used in the production of the different varieties of carnations and roses.

The Uniform Indoor Climate.

In our modern greenhouses we have eliminated climatic variations. We control the temperatures by the turn of a valve. Rainfall is displaced by the hose. Ventilation is accomplished without subjecting our plants to damaging winds. In short, it is our business to provide the most suitable climatic conditions for the development of our plants.

It is clear, then, that the only change in environment given the plants in a house where light, loamy soil is used, compared with one in which the benches are filled with a clay soil, is the soil itself.

Yet with this difference in the soil only, we frequently observe that there is a considerable variation in the size, brilliancy of color, and other characters of the bloom of the same variety.

A visit to the flower markets of our large cities affords many illustrations of these differences, when the products of the various establishments are seen side by side.

It is not to be expected that the soil adaptation is equally well defined with all varieties. Some, being more fixed, offer a greater resistance to change than others; nor should we expect to find the modifications that arise to be always in the same direction.

Not only in the character of the bloom may the influence of the soil appear, but in many cases it will be found to affect the habit of the plant itself. It does so in the field with outdoor crops, and it is reasonable to think that it exerts a similar influence on plants grown under glass.

Soils Used by Rose Growers.

A partial examination of the soils used by a few of our rose growers has already been made, and it discloses the great variety of soil-types that are being used in the production of this crop alone. Ranging in texture from dense clay loams to porous, sandy loams, practically all intermediate grades are represented. Yet in many instances two very widely differing soil-types are being used for the production of the same variety, resulting perhaps in a depreciation of the quality or quantity of bloom of one variety or the other.

Entrance to the Virgin Establishment, New Orleans.

I have recently visited a rose house where I found one of the most popular varieties giving such poor results that its cultivation is to be abandoned after this season. In this instance the size of the blooms was materially affected, though in other respects the general appearance of the plants was comparable in every way with those of the other varieties grown.

A recent experiment carried on to determine the effect of various fertilizers on carnations is particularly interesting when viewed from the standpoint of soil adaptation.

In this experiment two soils were used, various fertilizers being applied to each, comparison being with the soils to which stable manure alone was added. As it is no part of my present purpose to discuss the relative efficiency of fertilizers, I will consider only the results obtained from the use of stable manure. These soils were planted to four varieties of carnations of undoubted merit, and they were grown in a range of three even-span houses, without interior walls, making it practically one house. Particular attention was paid to the maintenance of favorable conditions, so that the only point of difference was in the soil in which the plants were grown, the same number of plants of each variety being grown in each of the soils used.

Results of Experiment.

Enchantress gave only 85 per cent as many blooms on soil No. 2 as on soil No. 1, Lawson 87 per cent and Craig but 78 per cent on the corresponding soils. Peary somewhat reversed conditions, and on soil No. 2 produced 4 per cent more blooms than on soil No. 1.

We have, then, three varieties out of four that showed a very decided falling off accompanied by a difference in soil only—all other conditions being the same. In one case the results are to all intents equal in each soil. Now, I take it that such results are not due to chance. There must be a reason. And I do not think it too much to offer the difference in soils as this reason.

Lawson, Enchantress and Craig found one of the soils far more adapted to their special requirements. With Peary the reverse was true, though the adaptation was not so marked. Nor is this illustrative of adaptation of soils to a whole race of plants, but to specific varieties.

It shows, also, the impropriety of attempting to draw definite conclusions as to the relative merits of different varieties, unless it can be shown that the soil-type is equally well adapted to all of the varieties grown. It is, however, in determining the varieties that will likely prove most remunerative to the individual grower that such tests have their real value. For with a single bench, in one season, information of vast importance for his future guidance is readily obtained.

Just what determines the peculiar fitness of a soil for the growth of certain plants or varieties of these plants is yet to be determined.

VIRGIN'S BOWER.

There is hardly any florist in the large cities of the country who does not know U. J. Virgin, of New Orleans, and those who are regular attendants at the conventions of the trade societies seldom fail to find the Crescent City florist among those present. To those who know Virgin, the accompanying illustration will have special interest, for it shows the entrance to his greenhouse establishment. The building in the center is potting-shed and boiler-house. At the left is a house of Easter lilies, and on the right a house of palms. Richard Eichling, who has charge of the greenhouse end of Mr. Virgin's business, stands on the right in the picture. The object in the center indicates that visitors are expected.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Directors' Meeting.

The board of directors of the S. A. F. was in session at Niagara Falls March 23 and 24. Those present were: President F. H. Traendly, New York; Secretary W. N. Rudd, Morgan Park, Ill.; H. V. Hallock, Queens, N. Y.; John Young, New York city; Theodore Wirth, Minneapolis; George Asmus, Chicago; W. F. Kasting and J. F. Cowell, Buffalo.

Two busy days were spent in the routine work of the society and in the preparations for the August convention at Niagara Falls.

National Flower Show.

There was a meeting of the committee of fifty at Chicago, March 26, Chairman Kasting presiding, with a membership of nearly half the committee present. Special committees reported progress and details were discussed.

A meeting of the executive committee, Chairman Kasting presiding, was held at Chicago, March 27.

DOOLEY'S DESIGNS.

A labor leader named Dooley died at Chicago a few days ago and the remains were taken to his old home at Cincinnati for burial. Dooley was popular and a large number of floral designs were sent from Chicago with the body. At Cincinnati other flowers were waiting and the remains "lay in state" in Eagles' hall, March 20. Fred Gear is a member of Cincinnati Aerie of the Eagles and had charge of the flowers. The illustration on this page shows the character of the display.

advantage of any lull in other operations to clean the foliage on them thoroughly.

Adiantums.

Adiantums, which have been resting for some time, will be pushing up a good crop of new fronds now. Keep these as near the light as possible. A heavy shade is not yet either necessary or desirable. The fronds will be much more serviceable if grown harder, which will be the case if merely the sun's direct rays are broken. The fronds on heavily shaded plants may be of a dark green color, but are decidedly soft.

Snails are often troublesome among adiantums and will speedily ruin a large batch if given a clear field. Bait in the form of fresh cabbage and lettuce leaves or slices of potato, if laid among the plants and examined daily, will be found to harbor many. If the pests are numerous, lift the plants from the bench and soak the stone or cinders with lime water; salt water will also be found equally effectual.

Nephrolepis Runners.

If some of your carnations are now partially run out and your stock of nephrolepis needs replenishing, the present is a good time to fill a bench with a good batch of runners. There is no need to remove any of the old carnation soil. Add some sand and leaf-mold to it, mix these with the soil in the bench, and you have an ideal compost. Shade the glass over the bench containing these runners and if you hang some cheesecloth from the roof in front of the bench to keep the air from the plants, it will be found beneficial.

Lorraine Begonias.

Many complaints are made each season of the difficulty in rooting the leaves of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine. Those who have had failures and still have some old stock plants which they have given a little rest, should now be able to get some nice shoots for propagating purposes. These like a brisk bottom heat, a top heat 10 degrees cooler and little shade until rooted. When you water, do

Palms.

The increasing power of the sun will now make a little additional shading imperative. Only a light coating should be given thus early. No greater mistake could be made than shading heavily at this time. So long as the wash on the glass breaks the direct rays of the sun and the foliage on your plants remains a dark green color, you are all right.

As work in all departments is now becoming pressing, any left-over potting should be completed as soon as possible. Avoid big shifts, especially in the case of such varieties as Cocos Weddelliana and Geonoma gracilis. Overpotting is ruinous to each of these.

Every florist should carry a few plants of Phoenix Roebelenii, which has now become fairly abundant and quite moderate in price. This palm is of easy culture, almost as graceful as Cocos Weddelliana, and makes an excellent house plant, being in this respect much superior to Latania Borbonica and Areca lutescens. This palm, to show its beauty, must be stood where its full symmetry can be seen and appreciated. Of course, Kentia Belmoreana still remains the most popular palm, but it is always well to grow a few of other useful varieties.

As you are liable to have a considerable call for palms Easter week, take

Growers are tempted to leave the flowers on Lorraine begonias too long. An idea has always been that the foliage from heavily flowered plants is soft and lacks the vigor of that grown on similar plants which have had the flowers removed all winter and leaf growth encouraged. The foliage and shoots on these latter begonias are much better for propagating purposes than you can obtain from any of the same produced on plants which have been allowed to simply flower themselves to death. Is there not a danger in the deterioration of this fine begonia unless more care is taken in selecting propagating stock?

Easter Lilies.

March, as usual, has favored us with many vagaries of climate and the progress of lilies has hardly been what might have been hoped for. Unless your buds now have a pronounced droop, they will be too late unless hard forcing is resorted to. If your plants are late and you feel you should make an effort to get them along in season, give them a night temperature of 70 degrees. Spray several times a day with warm water, and you may still be able to flower them when wanted. Spread the plants out well, to prevent loss of foliage, and, as the pots are full of roots and need lots of moisture, see that it is supplied. The plants having buds showing color should be placed in a cold house. Later, as the flowers become expanded, they may be held a fortnight in a cold pit or cellar.

Dutch Bulbous Stock.

Double tulips, like Murillo, La Can-deur and Crown of Gold, should now be brought into a cool house. If the house is not at liberty, use a cold-frame. Do not place the pots or pans under the benches, as they will become too much drawn. At this season you cannot have them any too stocky.

The single early tulips, such as Prosperpine, Kaiserskroon, Yellow Prince, Pink Beauty, Thomas Moore, Duchess de Parma and others, will come in bloom inside of three weeks, but it is well to have them a day or two ahead of time, as it is easy to retard them in cold storage.

Hyacinths and narcissi at this season can be forced rapidly and not over three weeks' time is necessary to bloom them.

Tritonias, ixias and sparaxis require a cool, airy house at all stages of their growth. If they are now just showing flower spikes they will be seasonable. The same applies to Gladiolus Colvillei The Bride and Spanish iris, both of which are useful for cutting at Easter.

Hardy Roses.

The passing of winter reminds us that many of our customers will be calling for hardy roses and shrubbery in variety. Nothing is to be gained by putting off the planting of these. The earlier the hybrid perpetual and rambler roses can be gotten into the ground, the better they will do. With the rambler class we have found it makes little difference whether the plants are grafted or on their own roots, but with the hybrid perpetuals grafted stock is much to be preferred, proving hardier, more vigorous and having greater longevity.

Care should always be taken to avoid letting the roots dry out before planting. A good plan is to dip them in clay and water. This is preferable to watering them. Plant so as to bury the graft two or three inches, spread the roots out well and tramp firmly. Do not allow any manure to come in direct contact with the roots.

Let the pruning wait until the plants start to break freely, no matter if you wait until the beginning of May. In pruning do not merely snip off the tops, but cut back to three or four eyes of the past season's wood on vigorous shoots, and one or two on weaker ones. This will ensure strong breaks.

For the colder states there are a few hybrid perpetuals which can be classed as reliable. The following we have found to be a good dozen: Ulrich Brunner, Frau Karl Druschki, Mrs. John Laing, Mme. Gabriel Luizet, Magna Charta, General Jacqueminot, Clio, Paul Neyron, Marchioness of Londonderry, John Hopper, Mrs. R. G. Sharman-Crawford and Prince Camille de Rohan.

There are now a good variety of ramblers to choose from in addition to the omnipresent and popular Crimson Rambler. There are such fine double pinks as Dorothy Perkins, Lady Gay and Farquhar, Baltimore Belle, the crimson single Hiawatha, one of the best; The Dawson, Carmine Pillar, bright rosy carmine in color, and Sweetheart, a lovely, sweet-scented double white variety. These are but a few which are hardy and such raisers as M. H. Walsh, of Woods Hole, Mass., are constantly adding to our store of treasures in this delightful class.

FROZEN FICUS.

Will you please let me know what is the matter with the enclosed leaf from a rubber plant? The plant is affected like this on all the leaves. I was asked by one of my customers to examine it, but I am not posted on rubber plants and have to call on you. C. H. W.

A single leaf of a rubber plant, without any particulars as to the conditions under which it has been grown, makes any diagnosis of such a case largely a matter of guesswork, but the leaf in question gives every indication of having been frozen, and this is most likely the cause of the whole trouble. If some of your carnations are now partially run out and your stock of nephrolepis needs replenishing, the present is a good time to fill a bench with a good batch of runners. There is no need to remove any of the old carnation soil. Add some sand and leaf-mold to it, mix these with the soil in the bench, and you have an ideal compost. Shade the glass over the bench containing these runners and if you hang some cheesecloth from the roof in front of the bench to keep the air from the plants, it will be found beneficial.

Lorraine Begonias.

Many complaints are made each season of the difficulty in rooting the leaves of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine. Those who have had failures and still have some old stock plants which they have given a little rest, should now be able to get some nice shoots for propagating purposes. These like a brisk bottom heat, a top heat 10 degrees cooler and little shade until rooted. When you water, do

SEASONABLE

Palms.

The increasing power of the sun will now make a little additional shading imperative. Only a light coating should be given thus early. No greater mistake could be made than shading heavily at this time. So long as the wash on the glass breaks the direct rays of the sun and the foliage on your plants remains a dark green color, you are all right.

As work in all departments is now becoming pressing, any left over potting should be completed as soon as possible. Avoid big shifts, especially in the case of such varieties as Cocos Weddelliana and Geonoma gracilis. Overpotting is ruinous to each of these.

Every florist should carry a few plants of Phoenix Roebelenii, which has now become fairly abundant and quite moderate in price. This palm is of easy culture, almost as graceful as Cocos Weddelliana, and makes an excellent house plant, being in this respect much superior to Latania Borbonica and Areca lutescens. This palm, to show its beauty, must be stood where its full symmetry can be seen and appreciated. Of course, Kentia Belmoreana still remains the most popular palm, but it is always well to grow a few of other useful varieties.

As you are liable to have a considerable call for palms Easter week, take it thoroughly and let the cutting bench dry out well between waterings.

Growers are tempted to leave the flowers on Lorraine begonias too long. An idea has always been that the foliage from heavily flowered plants is soft and lacks the vigor of that grown on similar plants which have had the flowers removed all winter and leaf growth encouraged. The foliage and shoots on these latter begonias are much better for propagating purposes than you can obtain from any of the same produced on plants which have been allowed to simply flower themselves to death. Is there not a danger in the deterioration of this fine begonia unless more care is taken in selecting propagating stock?

Easter Lilies.

March, as usual, has favored us with many vagaries of climate and the progress of lilies has hardly been what might have been hoped for. Unless your buds now have a pronounced droop, they will be too late unless hard forcing is resorted to. If your plants are late and you feel you should make an effort to get them along in season, give them a night temperature of 70 degrees. Spray several times a day with warm water, and you may still be able to flower them when wanted. Spread the plants out well, to prevent loss of foliage, and, as the pots are full of roots and need lots of moisture, see that it is supplied. The plants having buds showing color should be placed in a cool house. Later, as the flowers become expanded, they may be held a fortnight in a cold pit or cellar.

Dutch Bulbous Stock.

Double tulips, like Murillo, La Candeur and Crown of Gold, should now be brought into a cool house. If the house is not at liberty, use a cold frame. Do not place the pots or pans under the benches, as they will become too much drawn. At this season you cannot have them any too stocky.

The single early tulips, such as Prosperine, Kaiserskroon, Yellow Prince, Pink Beauty, Thomas Moore, Duchess de Parma and others, will come in bloom inside of three weeks, but it is well to have them a day or two ahead of time, as it is easy to retard them in cold storage.

Hyacinths and narcissi at this season can be forced rapidly and not over three weeks' time is necessary to bloom them.

Tritonias, ixias and sparaxis require a cool, airy house at all stages of their growth. If they are now just showing flower spikes they will be seasonable. The same applies to Gladiolus Colvillei The Bride and Spanish iris, both of which are useful for cutting at Easter.

Hardy Roses.

The passing of winter reminds us that many of our customers will be calling for hardy roses and shrubbery in variety. Nothing is to be gained by putting off the planting of these. The earlier the hybrid perpetual and rambler roses can be gotten into the ground, the better they will do. With the rambler class we have found it makes little difference whether the plants are grafted or on their own roots, but with the hybrid perpetuals grafted stock is much to be preferred, proving hardier, more vigorous and having greater longevity.

Care should always be taken to avoid letting the roots dry out before planting. A good plan is to dip them in clay and water. This is preferable to watering them. Plant so as to bury the graft two or three inches, spread the roots out well and tramp firmly. Do not allow any manure to come in direct contact with the roots.

Let the pruning wait until the plants start to break freely, no matter if you wait until the beginning of May. In pruning do not merely snip off the tops, but cut back to three or four eyes of the past season's wood on vigorous shoots, and one or two on weaker ones. This will ensure strong breaks.

For the colder states there are a few hybrid perpetuals which can be classed as reliable. The following we have found to be a good dozen: Ulrich Brunner, Frau Karl Druschki, Mrs. John Laing, Mme. Gabriel Luizet, Magna Charta, General Jacqueminot, Clio, Paul Neyron, Marchioness of Londonderry, John Hopper, Mrs. R. G. Sharman, Crawford and Prince Camille de Rohan.

There are now a good variety of ramblers to choose from in addition to the omnipresent and popular Crimson Rambler. There are such fine double pinks as Dorothy Perkins, Lady Gay and Farquhar, Baltimore Belle, the crimson single Hiawatha, one of the best; The Dawson, Carmine Pillar, bright rosy carmine in color, and Sweetheart, a lovely, sweet-scented double white variety. These are but a few which are hardy and such raisers as M. H. Walsh, of Woods Hole, Mass., are constantly adding to our store of treasures in this delightful class.

FROZEN FICUS.

Will you please let me know what is the matter with the enclosed leaf from a rubber plant? The plant is affected like this on all the leaves. I was asked by one of my customers to examine it, but I am not posted on rubber plants and have to call on you. C. H. W.

A single leaf of a rubber plant, with out any particulars as to the conditions under which it has been grown, makes any diagnosis of such a case largely a matter of guesswork, but the leaf in question gives every indication of having been frozen, and this is most likely the cause of the whole trouble. THE WEEKLY is printed Wednesday evening and mailed early Thursday morning. It is earnestly requested that all advertisers and correspondents mail their "copy" to reach us by Monday, or Tuesday at latest, instead of Wednesday morning, as many have done in the past.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

INCORPORATED BY ACT OF CONGRESS MARCH 4, '01

Officers for 1908: President, F. H. Traendly, New York; vice-president, George W. McClure, Buffalo; secretary pro tem., Willis N. Rudd, Morgan Park, Ill.; treasurer, H. B. Beatty, Pittsburg.

Annual convention, Niagara Falls, August 18 to 21, 1908.

First National Flower Show, Chicago, November 9 to 15, 1908; W. F. Kasting, Buffalo, chairman.

GOOD growers declare that nicotine extracts are, in the end, cheaper for fumigating than the old-fashioned tobacco stems that cost little.

THE REVIEW has more subscribers in the state of New York than in any other state in the Union. Pennsylvania is second and Ohio third.

THERE is not a word of complaint as to the state of trade at Portland and other cities on the Pacific northwest; business is good and everybody is happy.

THERE has been a marked improvement in market conditions in the large wholesale cut flower centers since March 20, particularly in the cities west of the Atlantic seaboard.

THERE are a great many moderate sized lots of cuttings of White Perfection scattered about the country, but the demand with the specialists in rooted cuttings is far from satisfied.

To relieve the greenhouse congestion, secure some warm stable manure and leaves for a mild hotbed. Many of the hardier plants will succeed well there after the beginning of April.

IF bulb beds were well frozen when covered, there need be no great hurry about uncovering them. If ground was soft when winter protection was put on, there will be danger of breaking the tops unless due care is exercised.

CANDYTUFT, double feverfew and stocks intended for Memorial day flowering should have the soil stirred about them and be encouraged to grow freely. Remember that there is only a space of six weeks this year between Easter and Memorial day.

B. ESCHNER, of M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia, has just completed a trip through the south, as far west as Kansas City and home by way of the lake cities. He says the retail florists everywhere are preparing for a big Easter. The general report was that social work has been light this winter, especially with the stores of the highest class, but that funeral work has been notably heavy everywhere.

PUT in cuttings of Moschosma riparium now, to be obtained on the cut back plants.

Do not forget the chrysanthemum cuttings, especially of kinds you may be short of.

CLEAN up the place—dirt in a florist's premises is incompatible with the character of his business.

THERE is nothing "special" about this issue of the REVIEW, but it contains ninety-six pages of live matter.

EBER HOLMES says he has discovered that, in growing cut flowers, it is not so much how it is done as who is doing it. There's a whole lot in that.

As prices fall in spring, too many growers are inclined to slight their stock and let the quality run down, forgetting that the best quality always has the advantage in a falling market.

DON'T PROCRASTINATE.

The flower business is a rapid fire affair; that's why florists are in the habit of expecting quick action from those they deal with. Perhaps it also explains why the REVIEW is expected to change advertisements received sixteen seconds before going to press. Perhaps it also explains why every Thursday morning the REVIEW receives several desirable advertisements which were intended for the issue that went to press the day before.

To secure the publication of an advertisement in the Ladies' Home Journal an advertiser must send in his copy six weeks in advance of publication. It does seem as though advertisers might give the REVIEW at least six hours.

Why not get your copy in Tuesday?

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

It is a pleasure to report a marked improvement in the market in the later days of last week, and a much more cheerful atmosphere in wholesale houses.

The improvement has been due to two causes, a shortening of supply and an increase in the shipping demand. There continue to be ample supplies in all departments, but there is no longer the unwieldy surplus which was so unpleasant a factor for several weeks. It appears that crops have shortened more with the outside customers than they have with local producers, for there are instances where people who have been consigning to this market for a month turned buyers at the end of last week. The change has not affected quoted rates to any great extent, but has been apparent in the less frequent necessity for cheap sales to clean out accumulations.

The Beauty crops have not come on as fast as was anticipated. There are, however, enough Beauties for all requirements and the buyers refuse to pay high prices for even the best goods. Richmond and Killarney are in splendid form and other roses are also of quality which cannot be otherwise than satisfactory. The supply and demand are near enough balanced to bring prices back somewhere near where they ought to be at this season.

While there has been a gradual shortening of carnation crops for a couple of weeks, there still is an ample supply for anyone who is willing to pay a fair price. Some of the Greeks who have been buying at $6 per thousand and getting good stock, think it pretty hard lines to find values doubling overnight, as they did March 20, but $15 per thousand still buys stock that is cheap at the price, and where the seller makes selection, he will still make a price within the means of the department store buyers.

Bulbous stock has not felt the improvement in the market; it is still too plentiful. Calla lilies are especially abundant and there are plenty of Easter lilies, with an occasional flurry when a few dozens are called for late in the day. Southern jonquils are in large supply and only salable for special bargain offerings.

The improvement in the market has not affected the violets, which are averaging steadily lower returns to growers. Sweet peas, if of good quality, sell well.

There is improved call for green goods, spring openings in the dry goods stores having made considerable call for asparagus and smilax. There is difference of opinion on the fern question. Some of the wholesalers are anxious to sell, while others are buying in anticipation of a rise in the market.

Various Notes.

The Foley Mfg. Co. has recently increased its capital from $100,000 to $125,000.

Matt Mann says he is having considerable trouble in rooting his young rose stock. The cuttings root all right, but damp off after being potted.

Carl N. Thomas, of the A. L. Randall Co., leaves March 28 to spend the summer on his farm near West Springfield, Pa. It is his intention to return early in the autumn.

According to the W. W. Barnard Co. there should be no shortage of asters in this market this season. They say the sale for aster seeds has been heavier than ever.

B. Eschner, of Rice & Co., spent three days in town last week. He says there is general complaint among the retailers that business is dull, but nevertheless everyone he called on gave him an order and in the aggregate the business booked was the best he ever has had in Chicago at this season.

The George Wittbold Co. had a close call on the night of March 18, when fire caused by spontaneous combustion broke out in the storage-room over the wagon barn. The building and contents were inflammable and the fire department did splendid work to stop the blaze with $500 to $600 loss. The company was lucky not to lose the building and the adjoining greenhouses.

The E. F. Winterson Co. has received a car of boxwood and other imported plants, the first of several provided for the spring business.

The funeral of Alfred Hildred, March 19, was attended by many in the trade. Mr. Hildred, who died March 16, was 47 years of age and had been in the retail business in the vicinity of Indiana avenue and Thirty-first street for about twenty-five years.

The monthly meeting of the Florists' Club will be held at the Union restaurant Thursday evening, April 2, at 8 o'clock. Those who were there at the March meeting will be on hand again, and many others are expected.

W. T. Buckley, of Springfield, was in the city last week. He says business is good at Springfield, both with those who do retail business and those who wholesale.

H. F. Port, the Maywood grower, has gone to Las Vegas, N. M., intending to remain at a sanitarium there until June 1, for treatment for tuberculosis. His greenhouse plant is left in charge of Mr. Radde, who has been with him for two years and who formerly was with Albert F. Amling.

In sending out his Easter list of specialties, E. H. Hunt sends a handy block of order blanks, so arranged that the customer retains a carbon copy of the order.

One of the incidents of the week was a call for 8,000 to 10,000 white carnations on a single order. They were for an opening. The buyer's name was White and he was not interested in any other color.

Bassett & Washburn report an especially heavy crop in their houses of grafted Bride and Maid.

Fred Sperry, of Vaughan & Sperry, has been on the sick list for nearly a week.

Manusos Bros., who deal in flowers, fruits and candy at State and Van Buren streets and who are large buyers when cut flowers are cheap, were fined $25 and costs March 23 for selling candy short weight.

John Sterrett is now with the Benthay-Coatsworth Co.

E. Fransen, of Scheiden & Schoos, says he looks for a large supply of carnations for Easter, and plenty of roses.

Peter Reinberg is busy campaigning, for his is normally a republican ward, and this year's republican candidate is a live member.

George Reinberg is cutting some of the spring Chatenay, on stems four and five feet long.

Frank Ayres is again on duty with his brother-in-law, C. W. McKellar. Mrs. McKellar sailed from New Orleans March 16 on the Southern Pacific steamer for New York.

N. J. Wiator says the improvement in the market has been so great that it makes him smile every time he thinks about it.

J. J. Kruchten has taken on several new growers during the period of large supply and is now prepared to reap the benefit of improved conditions.

A. H. Budlong says he is not interested in the talk of a coal miners' strike and advancing prices. The J. A. Budlong coal sheds are full of fuel, bought when the market was lowest.

Visitors to the establishment of the Poehlmann Bros. Co. this week have spoken specially well of the way the Cardinal rose is doing there. It promises to be a feature of this market next year.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

There is not much to say of the market this week that has not been thrashed over many times during the last two months. But Lent is almost over and optimism is in the air. Saturday's market was more cheerful and, while prices did not advance, there was a generous cleaning up of accumulations and the market was left comparatively bare. The week opens with rain and a spring temperature.

Roses are on crop in earnest and the receipts are already enormous. This may cause a shortage about Easter, and many of the wholesalers predict it. Beauties, after the early demand is filled, often drop to $15 a hundred for the best. Carnations and violets stay down and sometimes it looks as if they were knocked out completely. The situation is the more serious because so many of the growers in this vicinity make the carnation their specialty.

With the Plantsmen.

Retailers are all busy and most of them cheerful as to Easter sales. They are buying more cautiously than usual and the medium sized plants are the most popular, but there will be nothing worth while left over in any grower's establishment within a radius of twenty-five miles of New York city. Out at Whitestone, the Hinode Co. has a grand display of lilies, Japanese plants of every size and age and the usual flowering variety. Pankok & Schumacher have grand ramblers and bougainvilleas and Louis Dupuy has house after house overflowing with splendid hydrangeas and heather. Darlington's stock is large, as usual, and over at College Point Anton Schultheis makes his annual bid for appreciation. His new rose, Apple Bloss-som, bids fair to be a hit. All his ramblers are well flowered. Herman Dreyer, at Woodside, has his new plant filled to bursting with all the popular varieties, and Will Siebrecht, at Astoria, is still the bulb and valley king of Long Island. His flats of tulips, narcissi and hyacinths are fully up to his record of over twenty years. A week could profitably be spent with the plant growers, for their name is legion.

John Scott has his usual display of ferns and lilies. Alfred Zeller has a splendid assortment of everything from oranges to kentias, and Louis Schmutz holds the fort at his old stand on Clarkson street. At Bay Ridge the J. M. Keller Co. has as large and fine an assortment as ever. These are the large growers of Long Island. But these are only a selection from the great army of wholesale florists on the Brooklyn side of the river and are only emphasized because of their preparations for Easter. And so in Jersey, it would take pages to list the sources of Easter's floral celebration. A day could be well spent with the Julius Roehrs Co., and another day with Bobbink & Atkins. Then, there is H. C. Steinhoff, at West Hoboken, and all the hundred and one growers of this booming suburb of New York, made doubly valuable since the opening of the tunnels that bring it within ten minutes of the big city.

Gardeners Meet.

The national association of gardeners gave its first annual exhibition March 19 and 20, at Allaires hall, Seventeenth street and Third avenue, and it was a splendid success. John Shore, of Harrison, is the president, and the judges of the exhibits were Messrs. Bunyard, Delaney and Carlstrom. The exhibition was extensive and beautiful. The awards were: Silver cup, by the president, for best seedling carnations, won by Oscar Carlson, of Fairfield, Conn. Two gold cups, from Peter Henderson & Co., won by James Bell, gardener for Prof. Osborne, Garrison, N. Y., and Mr. Wynne, gardener for W. W. Heroy, Stamford, Conn., tied for best display of carnations. Gold cup, by Pierson U-Bar Co., for best display of plants in flower, won by James Bell, of Garrison. Gold cup, by the Gardeners' Chronicle, for best display of hardy bulbs in flower, won by William Brandenberg, North Arlington, N. J. Gold cup, by Bobbink & Atkins, for best collection of cut roses, won by J. P. Sorenson, gardener for Stewart Smith, Stamford, Conn. Gold cup, by J. P. Sorenson, for best display of double and single violets, won by John Shore, Harrison, N. Y. John Shore took first prize on White Lawson and second on Red Lawson and Enchantress. Mr. Wynne took first prize for Prosperity, Lawson and Mrs. Patten. James Bell won first on Victory, Rose-pink Enchantress and White Perfection.

Special prizes were awarded James Bell for a dendrobium with seventy-eight flowers; Carl Shafer, for two varieties of stocks and Mr. Wynne for one variety.

Mr. Maynard made a tireless and efficient manager and secretary. At the banquet forty gardeners and their guests assembled. The speakers were George T. Powell, on "Apple Culture in New York State"; P. O'Mara, on "The Promotion of Horticulture Through Private Gardeners"; Carl Shafer, of Tuxedo Park, 74 years old and the father of four gardeners, on "Practical Advice to Young Gardeners"; L. W. C. Tuthill, on "How to Please the Ladies," which was the hit of the evening. Charles Elliott, of Williams Bay, representing fifty Wisconsin members of the society, spoke for the western gardeners. Mr. DeForest, of Lord & Burnham Co., told stories that kept the company in good humor. Harry Bunyard spoke of his pleasant relations with all the gardeners of America and the evening was most delightful and harmonious. The gardeners' society has every reason to be proud of its initial demonstration.

Various Notes.

St. Patrick's day materialized the parade of 50,000 sons of Erin, but the green carnation was a frost. Not an Irishman wore one. But the dear little shamrock sold to beat the band. Few of them were left, and every retailer handled them.

Al Rickards has just returned from Virginia, where he placed an immense order for azaleas, roses and rhododendrons.

Hanft Bros. are now located in their new store, at Madison avenue and Sixty-second street, one of the handsomest in the city, with immense window display and every facility for artistic decoration.

Alfred M. Van Praag, 1207 Broadway, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $3,986, with nominal assets of $585, consisting of fixtures, $300; accounts, $675, which have been assigned, and cash in bank, $10. Judge Holt has appointed W. D. Conrad receiver.

night and day. Shipments are growing beyond expectations. Reed & Keller will soon offer some new inventions. The Geller Co. reports a large demand for prepared magnolia leaves. B. Rosens has a large stock of galax and wild smilax is arriving daily. Russin & Hanfling have remodeled their store and their factory is busy with baskets and sheaves, which are their specialties. They all are well prepared for the Easter demand.

J. T. Cokely, of the Scranton Florists' Supply Co., was in the city March 23 on his way to New England.

Bowling.

The New York Florists' Bowling Club's first meeting, March 20, was well attended. W. E. Marshall was elected president, J. A. Shaw secretary, and J. A. Manda treasurer. A communication from President Traendly was read announcing his offer of free transportation to the five members of the club making an average of 155 or over in twenty practice games, for which he received a unanimous vote of thanks. These games begin Friday evening, April 3, and the second and third games will count each evening until all are rolled. The Albion alleys have been secured, at 117 West Twenty-third street, close to Sixth avenue, and are most convenient. Already there are nearly twenty members, as follows: Harry Bunyard, Chas. Weathered, P. O'Mara, Robert Berry, F. H. Traendly, J. A. Manda, N. Schreiber, W. H. Marshall, Al Rickards, Will Rickards, Wm. Duckham, F. A. Lord, John Young, Geo. A. Burnett, Jos. Fenrich, Robert Schultz, S. Butterfield, J.

A. Shaw. The dues are 50 cents a night, payable in advance, and no one can bowl who is not a member of the New York Florists' Club.

The games on Friday evening were interesting. There will be a better average than 155 by the five winners of a free trip to the convention and a very strenuous competition, judging by the preliminary. Messrs. Young, Schultz and Shaw modestly withhold their score for the first evening. Fred Lentz, who will be a regular member of the club, rolled one game and made 180, without half trying. The following were the scores of the best six:

The Market.

Trade last week was reported as good in all parts of the city, in spite of the falling off in large social functions and other events that do not take place during Lent. A great deal of the work was for funerals.

Stock at the wholesale houses was not nearly so plentiful as the week previous and prices went up a notch or two on all grades of stock. Perhaps the shippers sent in less in order to obtain better prices. The wholesalers had less stock to handle and some days cleaned up pretty well. As it is, there are plenty of roses and carnations coming in, but none to dump. Violets are becoming smaller and will not last much longer if the warm weather keeps up. Bulbous stock is still plentiful. There are too many Von Sions and jonquils for the demand. Smilax and other greens sell well.

Various Notes.

The firm of Kelley & Petschonek has been dissolved by mutual consent. The place will be continued under the name of the Kelley Floral Co. The other members of the firm are J. Wolfert and C. Wolfert. They will continue at the old stand, 627 North Kingshighway, the Wolferts being father-in-law and brother-in-law of Mr. Kelley.

C. Young & Sons Co. put in a busy week in the seed and plant shipping department. Local trade in this line is now well under way.

Union market was fairly alive with blooming plants during the few warm days last week. All stands reported good sales.

Vincent J. Gorley, president of the Grimm & Gorley Floral Co., on Cass avenue, has purchased a tract of land with 160 feet frontage on St. Louis avenue from Jesse Van Campenhoudt for a consideration of $5,000. The purchase includes a number of greenhouses which were run by Mr. Van Campenhoudt. The company will build more houses this summer and grow cut flowers for its own use.

The Engelmann Botanical Club has decided to hold a spring flower show next month. Last year it failed to hold one, owing to the backward spring. This year things are more favorable.

Nat Kingsley, a member of the Mul-lanphy Flower Co., on Grand avenue, has disappeared. His partner, Mr. Seeger, and his friends fear that he has met with foul play, as his affairs are in good shape.

Fred Foster, of the Foster Floral Co., met with an accident Sunday, March 22, while out driving. Both of his legs and ribs were fractured and it will be Easter before he will be able to be about to attend to business.

Plant decorations were quite numerous last week, for spring openings of downtown department stores. Among those who were busy with them were W. Schray & Sons, Charles Beyer, C. Young & Sons Co. and the Sanders Nurseries.

A. Brix's place on St. Louis avenue is loaded down with fine spring blooming plants of every variety in season. All come from his Mead avenue greenhouses. Cut flower trade is reported a little slow, but the plant trade has kept him busy.

Frank Fillmore, who is a member of the grand council of the Royal Arcanum, spent the greater part of last week in the city attending the sessions. The meeting place was made attractive by his daily distribution of carnations.

Park Commissioner Phil Scanlan in his report tells the board of public improvements that work of restoration of Forest park, used by the Louisiana Exposition Co., moves slowly and the world's fair site is still far from restoration, and that trees and shrubs are arranged without system and that little hopes are held out for complete restoration this year.

Charles Schoenle, one of the firm of Burton-Allison Co., manufacturers of flower colorings, reports that they were never so busy as the week before St. Patrick's day, supplying green coloring to almost every state in the Union. They expect to double their business next year, as the goods gave general satisfaction.

Fred Anmann, of Edwardsville, Ill., Adolph Fehr, of Belleville, and William Winter, of Kirkwood, were in town last week, calling on friends in the trade. All are having a large crop of cut flowers, consigning to this market.

The Florists' Club's meeting comes early in the month, April 9. This meeting will be held in the new hall, known as Bowman's hall, northeast corner of Eleventh and Locust streets. The April meetings are generally poorly attended, owing to the busy planting season with the growers. President Young and Secretary Bentzen will make a special effort to get out the retail and wholesale members, who are none too busy, and it is to be hoped that they will come out in goodly numbers, as a number of important discussions are to come up.

The Market.

If anything, a slight improvement is noticeable. There is no improvement in prices, which rule lower than for many years at this season. Roses are on the downward grade. The best Beauties are bringing about half what they realized a month ago, few passing $3 per dozen. The finest Richmond and Killarney bring the same money. Of smaller grades there is a heavy excess of all kinds and the street fakers have all the roses, carnations, violets and bulbous stock they want. Carnations are coming in somewhat in reduced numbers. Many growers state that their plants are now somewhat off crop. While prices do not harden, there is less stock wasted than was the case a few weeks ago. Violets are deteriorating in quality. The singles are coming smaller and paler in color. Easter supplies of these promise to be lighter than usual.

Sweet peas are plentiful and of good quality, selling fairly well. They will help to fill the violet gap at Easter. Bulbous stock is abundant and of excellent quality, still moving slowly. The call for lilies and callas is light. Antirrhinums are fine and there is a good deal of miscellaneous spring stock which meets with an uncertain demand.

Various Notes.

The spring flower show at Horticultural hall was the main attraction the last few days and brought the usual attendance of florists and gardeners. Among those from a distance were: C. S. Strout, Biddeford, Me.; J. E. Lager, Summit, N. J.; George F. Struck, Frederick W. Kelsey, E. J. Farrington, New York; W. A. Manda, South Orange, N. J.; J. S. Hay and I. Rosnosky, Philadelphia; F. C. Green, Warwick, R. I.; S. J. Reuter, Westerly, R. I.; O. P. Beckley, Harrisburg, Pa.; T. McCarthy, Providence, R. I.; J. F. Huss, Hartford, Conn. A report of the show appears elsewhere in this issue.

A small party of rose enthusiasts accompanied W. H. Elliott to his Madbury, N. H., establishment March 19. Included in the party were F. E. Palmer, Duncan Finlayson, Patrick Welch, A. E. Eisenhardt, James Sheeler, Eber Holmes and S. J. Reuter. The large new house, 60x1,000, although planted quite late, was in fine shape. The older house, 56x840, also contained an excellent lot of stock. About 20,000 each of Killarney and Richmond are grown, also a batch of Safrano. Some of the old Isabella Sprunt are also being tried. The visitors were impressed with the advantages of the large houses for rose growing, one gentleman declaring that the light really seemed stronger in the new house than outdoors.

Tickets for the banquet and dance of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club at Horticultural hall, April 1, are selling well and the attendance promises to be a record one. Robert Cameron has promised to lead the Scotch reel, which should be one of the features of the evening.

The trustees of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society March 21 endorsed the plan of the Boston park commissioners for two rows of elms to eventually replace the four rows now growing on Commonwealth avenue. Prof. C. S. Sargent and the late F. L. Olmstead recommended the two-row plan as long ago as 1880 and Superintendent Pettigrew placed two rows of English elms several years ago in well prepared holes, which are making splendid growth. Opposition comes from some landscape architects and residents, as the time arrives to gradually cut away the heterogeneous lot of older trees to give the younger ones a chance.

The death of William H. Spooner,

March 21, reported elsewhere in this issue, caused many expressions of regret among horticulturists. There was no more familiar figure than Mr. Spooner's at Horticultural hall, and his passing is a great loss to the Massachusetts Horticultural Society.

William Sim states that all his crop of violets in the houses will be gone for Easter but will have a fine lot in frames, which are not yet uncovered. His sweet pea, Watching, should prove a popular forcing kind, blooming as it does when a foot high. Flowers are pure white and quite equal to those of Mont Blanc or Florence Denzer.

M. A. Patten is one of several who intend to drop Rose-pink Enchantress in favor of Winsor another season. He is favorably impressed with the qualities of the latter.

John W. Duncan has been the victim of an acute attack of muscular rheumatism, but is improving.

The delegation to the American Rose Society's meeting in Chicago was rather small. The busy season kept some at home who had planned to attend. Many are holding back for the national show in November.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Club will hold its next field day at the establishment of Thomas Roland, Nahant, April 11. Mr. Roland is a noted grower of pot plants, and a visit to Nahant will undoubtedly attract a large attendance.

M. H. Walsh says every rose lover should grow the hybrid tea, Betty, one of Alex. Dickson & Son's introductions. The color is ruddy gold and it is a continuous bloomer. We wish that Mr. Walsh's fine specimen ramblers could have been shown in Chicago. They would have proved a revelation to many growers.

A communication from a well-known Natick rose grower, read at the last meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, caused much amusement. He forwarded a handsome artificial yellow rose to be passed upon by the committee on exhibits, it being rose night, and took occasion to refer to a number of prominent club members in his usual witty style.

The proposal of Mayor Hibbard to include the department of public grounds under the park department, meets with almost general approval. The Common and Public Gardens would be better cared for under such an arrangement, than as at present.

Henry M. Robinson & Co. are preparing for a heavy Easter trade. They report trade as much better than a year ago, although prices are unusually low. Paine Bros., of Randolph, are among many problems, and it is a difficult matter to get the average householder to understand just what is required in the way of care, so that repeated failures have discouraged a great many. Dormant roses shipped in from the east generally arrive with the roots badly dried, and a large percentage of them die. Reputable concerns should, for their own sakes, use more care in packing shipments for the arid states, so as to prevent this drying out. Shipments are also made by the itinerant peddlers, who care nothing for the interests of their customers, and the buyer is not entitled to much sympathy when he finds his investment a total loss. But such transactions are an injury to the business, for a man is loath to try again if his first purchase proves a failure.

ROSES IN COLORADO.

Difficulties in Winter.

Roses which are hardy in regions where the temperature goes very much lower than it does in Denver, often winter-kill with us, but it is not the severe cold that kills them. A plant suffering from drought will not endure the same degree of cold that it would if the soil were in a reasonably moist condition. Since November 1 we have had a total rainfall of less than an inch and a half up to March 15, and during that time we have only had three storms where the precipitation was one-quarter inch. Then, again, we have a great many warm winter days, and especially warm days in February, March and April, which make the buds swell, only to be severely frozen later on.

During this same period the nights are generally about 25 degrees colder than the days, but this difference sometimes reaches to more than 50 degrees, and on rare occasions to nearly 60 degrees. It is obvious that a day temperature of 70 degrees, followed by a night temperature of 20 degrees in April, is more than any rose plant can well withstand.

The drying winds and the bright sunshine also work a great deal of harm, and with us it is more essential to provide protection from the sun than it is from the cold. We find that plants on the north side of a tight board fence generally come through the winter in pretty good shape, while those on the south side of the same fence are very apt to die. Tea roses do not seem to have vitality enough to withstand our winters, even when protected, but the hybrid teas do very nicely and are planted quite largely. Climbing roses are apt to have the wood badly killed back, unless they are in a position where they are sheltered from the sun.

The Planting of Field Stock.

Owing to our dry winters, few hardy roses are planted in the fall, and spring planting of field-grown stock often meets with failure, unless the planting is done very early. In our establishment we have advocated the planting of young roses from 4-inch pots in preference to field-grown stock, the results being much more satisfactory. By fall, these roses are vigorous bushes and in good condition to endure the hardships of winter. Roses on their own roots are much to be preferred to budded stock for the garden, because if the tops are badly killed back they are likely to make good growth again from the bottom.

I find that in many quarters the idea prevails that an apprentice who has served a year or two in the east can come to Colorado and rank as a first-class florist. In other words, it is thought that our methods are crude, our growers ignorant and unskillful, and our structures of an obsolete type. We are apt to be a little resentful of such an assumption, for it is erroneous, and while I do not wish to appear boastful, it is due the florists of our section to say that they are an intelligent lot of men, whose character and methods will not suffer by comparison with the florists of any other section. While our houses are not as expensive or as extensive as some in other parts of the country, they are, in the main, well suited to the purposes for which they are intended. Our rose growers do not cut a large number of flowers on extra long stems that would grade as "specials" in this market, because our market does not demand much stock of that grade, and also because our climate tends to produce a more slender growth and a more early setting of the buds; but the stock averages well, is well colored, unless faded by too much sun, and would sell well in any market.

Problems Peculiar to Colorado.

Nothing which I have said should be construed as intimating that the problems with which we contend are more difficult than those encountered in the eastern states, but they are different. Our ranks are constantly being augmented by accessions from the east, and any florist who has succeeded there may confidently expect to succeed anywhere; but he will make a great mistake if he allows his previous success to blind him to the fact that a strange country means strange conditions, and that those who have gone before him are, in all probability, able to aid him by a recital of their own mistakes. Whether they will aid him will depend largely upon his own attitude.

The people of the west speak of a newcomer as a "tenderfoot," and, until he has become acclimated, he will find it politic to assume a meek and lowly demeanor. If he does, he will receive a cordial welcome and find his fellow florists a lot of good fellows; but if he begins by commenting adversely on what he sees, and sins still further by predicting the things he proposes to accomplish, he cannot wonder if the natives stand back and prepare to laugh, when he proves the truth of the adage that "pride goeth before a fall."

Most rose growers who come to our climate from the east, come with a feeling that the dry air and continual sunshine are all they need to insure success, and there is no disguising the fact that we are free from troubles that are so serious a matter to our eastern brethren during the dark days of winter; but dry air and sunshine are not the only essentials. The regions where vegetation grows luxuriantly are regions that have a humid atmosphere and the cloudy days which necessarily come with such an atmosphere. Many a rose grower has come to Colorado and, scorning advice, has attempted to dry off his roses in the summer for the purpose of starting them up later, as he had been accustomed to do. The drying is easy, but the subsequent starting is a problem. We frequently carry over roses to the second, and even the third, year, but we do not attempt to stop them, and we keep them practically in full growth, even if we propose to transfer the bushes from one house to another.

Supply and Demand in Colorado.

Just at present in Denver the supply of cut flowers is decidedly in excess of the demand. This is apt to be true with us for a short time in the fall and again in the spring, but during the rest of the year the supply and demand seem pretty well balanced. There was a time when a great many roses were shipped to Colorado by eastern growers, but I believe that practically none is shipped in now.

The people of Colorado, as a class, are what would be termed "good spenders," but not in the way that seems to be generally imagined. There are very few instances of the lucky miner with more money than he knows what to do with. They generally buy what they have use for, and are willing to pay a fair price for it, but it is a mistake to suppose that they are disposed to throw their money away. On the other hand, what is commonly known as "shopping" or "haggling," for the sake of getting a small reduction in the price, is not much practiced.

The prices which are obtainable in the Denver market are never as high as the highest prices obtainable in the Chicago market, especially at Christmas, but prices are more even the year through, and a considerable part of the retail trade is supplied under contract, where the prices are fixed in advance. No one has ever made a success of a wholesale commission house in Denver, and it looks as though such an enterprise could not be a success until there is room for two such concerns, for it is hard to get the growers to place confidence in a man who has no competition.

Volume of Business.

As nearly as I can determine, the forcing of roses in Colorado only dates back to 1873, when Gus Opitz grew a dozen plants or so. The following year Rushmore & Son planted Hermosa, Isabella Sprunt, Safrano and Lamarque, all in a house about fifty feet long.

I have sent out numerous inquiries, and, using the replies received as a basis, I estimate that the florists of the state are at present forcing about 35,000 Beauties, 30,000 Brides, 20,000 each of Bridesmaid, Chatenay and Richmond, and 10,000 other roses, including Roosevelt, Killarney, Perle, Kaiserin and Moulton. It is interesting to note that not a single concern reported any Liberty, and that rose seems to have been completely supplanted by Richmond.

The retail business in the state probably approximates $650,000 per annum, or $1 for each inhabitant. I would not like to venture an estimate of the amount of wholesale business done with adjoining states, but it is considerable. These figures must seem absurdly small to Chicago florists who are accustomed to places with a million feet of glass under one management; but some day the men who have grown rich in Chicago will make their homes in Colorado, where summer and winter alike are delightful, and we in our turn will build large places and get rich catering to their wants.

Business Opportunities.

Just at present there does not seem to be any opening for increased areas of glass in the vicinity of Denver, but there are, doubtless, a number of small towns in the state where a florist could start in a modest way and gradually build up a business which would be fairly remunerative. Such a man would do well to work a year for some established concern, where he could observe the methods practiced, and he could then start for himself with less risk of costly mistakes. If success came slowly, he would find some compensation in the joy of living among a warm-hearted and generous people, in a glorious climate, with noble mountains in view, whose charm would ever increase. What better can any country offer than moderate financial success in such an environment?

This paper would not be complete without some reference to the present financial condition, and I am glad to be able to say that in Colorado the recent depression has not made any ap-

The Rising Eastern Market.

There has been a decided change for the better during the last week, most noticeably in the carnation market, which was in healthier condition Friday and Saturday than at any time during the last six weeks. While not so marked during the first three days of this week, the improvement has continued, the supply being cut down considerably by the dark weather. Various reasons are given for the improvement in business at a time when it was not expected. The best informed judges of the market believe that it is due to the decided reduction in prices, bringing flowers within the reach of a larger number of buyers. Special efforts were made to relieve the situation in carnations by several of the wholesalers, with gratifying results. The retailers also took advantage of the market conditions to make special sales of different varieties of flowers, southern daffodils being the favorite flower for this purpose, but in direct opposition to the general trend, the Century Flower Shop chose the aristocratic Beauty, making special prices on a good grade of this rose.

An impetus has been given to the demand for well grown blooms of Emperor and other choice single daffodils by the arrival of heavier shipments of southern stock, some of the leading shops seeming to prefer to carry only the best when everyone is carrying daffodils in quantity. Single violets of finest quality are about done. The plants grown in frames and in the open will be depended on to furnish stock until Easter. While the valley situation has not greatly improved, there have been some excellent orders. Cattleyas have become much more plentiful and are fine in several varieties. Fine long-stemmed sweet peas are in demand, but not ordinary stock. Callas continue abundant. Gardenias are but little sought after. There is some excellent snapdragon in the market. Greens are in fair but not brisk demand.

N. J., by the King Construction Co., of North Tonawanda, N. Y., for Walter P. Stokes. Mr. Stokes greeted his visitor most cordially and was enthusiastic in his praise of the new houses, which are a commercial success. The varieties of plants grown in them all do well, without exception; and even lily of the valley, which it was thought would succeed in any old place, is treated to a desirable position in one of the new houses, and responds smilingly to its cheerful surroundings.

Mr. Stokes and his manager have special cause to be proud of their Hydrangea Otaksa. Something like 10,000 plants of this old-time favorite are grown, and grown in a way that one rarely sees, sturdy plants, well set with large buds, clean foliage, and not a stake used anywhere. They were the picture of health. No exact record was made of the numbers of the blooms on the different sizes of pots, but it is safe to say that their average was high.

Ferns are another specialty here, Nephrolepis Scottii being preferred and extensively grown. The plants are in excellent shape, and Mr. Stokes finds a good market for them throughout the year. Whitmani, planted out in the benches, looked well.

But the thing that most surprised and interested Phil was a bench of Liliun giganteum, planted out for cut flowers, just as carnations or chrysanthemums are planted out. By this method something like four times as many bulbs can be grown in a given space to advantage. The stock was in excellent condition. Mr. Stokes' manager stated that the plants bloomed evenly, and that six crops of bulbs could be grown in the same soil without change, barring the addition of a little fertilizer. This method will surely revolutionize the growing of lilies for cut flowers.

Out on the "L."

The greenhouses of the Robert Craig Co., at Forty-ninth and Market streets, are largely devoted to Easter stock at present. The quality and variety of plants grown is as fine as one could wish to see. The cool weather of the last week has been utilized to harden the growth, putting that finish so much desired in plants that are to keep well in church and home. Three or four large houses are completely filled with hardy roses. Crimson Rambler is in finer condition than I think I have ever seen it, the sizes ranging from sturdy plants in 6-inch pots to immense trained specimens in 10-inch, all well set with buds and well clothed with foliage. In the second Crimson Rambler house was a bench of Tausendsehn, variously translated by the German gardeners as a "Thousand Beauties" and a "Thousand Times Beautiful," its glossy green foliage shining so brightly in the sun as almost to warrant the belief that their varied-colored blooms will be reflected as in a mirror. The wood is almost thornless.

Another large house is filled with Crimson Rambler's cousins, Lady Gay, dark pink with drooping clusters, and Dorothy Perkins, light pink, upright in growth, both in fine condition.

A number of houses are devoted to azaleas. Mme. Vander Cruysen, Vervæneana, Bernard Andrea Alba, Niobe, Hexe (the improved Fire Fly), the Empresses of India and Brazil, among the varieties grown. The feature of the azaleas that interested me most was the pyramid-shaped plants of the first three named varieties. These plants are naturally more expensive than those grown in the usual way. When well flowered they should prove a most attractive novelty.

Next in point of quantity and interest came the lilies, a splendid lot of some 8,000 or more giganteum, and something over 4,000 from the Azores, all green, healthy and well budded, some grown in large pans with twenty or twenty-five blooms on each for specimens. Spiraea Gladstone was in magnificent condition, each plant showing perfect form and drooping foliage combined with long spikes of bloom, denoting good culture. A few pink spiræas are being grown as a novelty. The rhododendrons were fine, well budded and perfectly clean. Pink Pearl, the finest of all, will be largely grown in the future. One house was devoted to genistas, the plants ranging from large specimens to small stock in 4-inch pots, all well set with buds, the last named size useful for basket work. Returning again to the roses, a lot of Baby Ramblers and White Baby Rambler (Catherine Zeimet) and a number of hybrid and hybrid teas are coming on nicely. A thousand pots of valley are being started. A nice lot of Hydrangea Otaksa and Queen Alexandra daisies are well covered with flowers.

Merion.

Alfred M. Campbell said earnestly, "You must be sure to see Faust's lilies." "Did he say Mr. Faust?" you ask. Probably not, for Alfred M. Campbell and Henry I. Faust are such good friends that the names David and Jonathan might readily be applied to them. So to the greenhouses of Henry I. Faust, at Merion, Phil straightway repaired, and despite the failure to arrange beforehand the exact time of calling, was fortunate enough to find Mr. Faust at home. The lilies were certainly well worth seeing, some 10,000 of them; perhaps two-thirds giganteum, while the remaining third were bulbs from the Azores grown three in a pot for cut flowers. The giganteum intended for pot sales were in superb condition, of a good medium height, well set with buds, the foliage a rich dark green down to the pot. There was not a trace of disease to be seen anywhere. The average number of buds to each pot was somewhere about six on giganteum, while on those from the Azores it was probably two and a half, the bulbs being smaller. The idea in growing three of the latter kind to each pot is to economize space; a 6-inch pot producing only two and a half flowers would be grown at a loss, while when each pot produces seven and a half flowers, as in the present case, there is a profit to the grower, and the buyer who wants a limited number of blooms to each stalk is satisfied. Mr. Faust is so clever a grower that he prospers on wholesale specialties, chiefly chrysanthemums and lilies, not being led aside into the retail channel by the wealthy residents of Merion.

Henry F. Michell says that the statistics of the Vacant Lots Association prove that $1 expended in vegetable seeds will produce $50 worth of vegetables. Where labor has to be paid for, an addition of perhaps $15 must be made to the cost of production.

ROBERT GROVES, 127 Commercial St. Adams, Mass.

Adolph Farenwald, of Roslyn, went to Chicago on the sixteen-hour flyer March 24. Both had exhibits of fine roses, including Wyndmoor, the first named grower's coming debutante.

The Pennsylvania Horticultural Society's spring show will open Tuesday, March 31. PHIL.

THE DEATH ROLL.*William H. Spooner.

In the death of William H. Spooner on March 21, Jamaica Plain lost one of its oldest and most esteemed citizens, and horticulture in Massachusetts one of its most enthusiastic champions. The deceased gentleman was taken ill March 14 with an intestinal trouble which necessitated an operation, for which he was removed to the Emerson hospital, Forest Hills. The operation was performed early in the afternoon, but Mr. Spooner failed to come out of the influence of the ether.

William H. Spooner was born in Jamaica Plain, Mass., April 2, 1823, and, with the exception of three years spent in New York, had spent his whole life there. He was the son of William Heath Spooner and Harriet Curtis Spooner. His mother belonged to an old revolutionary family.

During his whole life he was an ardent lover of horticulture, hardy roses being always his specialty. For many years he grew roses commercially, at one time being associated with W. C. Strong. He imported all the best new varieties from England and France and his exhibits at Horticultural hall carried off a number of the leading prizes for many years.

The deceased gentleman was one of the oldest members of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, joining it when quite a young man. He had filled about every office in the gift of the society, including that of president for two years. He was a member of the first board of trustees under the new management at the present hall and at the time of his death was a delegate to the State Board of Agriculture. There were few exhibitions which Mr. Spooner failed to attend, the summer weekly exhibitions being his special favorites. He had presided at all the lectures given during the winter course just ended and his genial presence and familiar figure will be greatly missed at Horticultural hall.

Mr. Spooner, as a member of the State Board of Agriculture, took a keen interest in the management of the Massachusetts Agricultural College at Amherst, was a strong advocate of increased planting of fruit and forest trees and was a consistent champion of every measure for promoting the advancement of agriculture and horticulture. He had served West Roxbury in the state legislature in 1884 and 1885.

Vegetable Forcing.

It is stated that when Florida truckers get a cent apiece, net, for cucumbers, or the same return for head lettuce, they are making a good profit. C. W. Skinner, the irrigation man, adds to this that the only drawback to Florida as a market gardening state—the one thing that stands in the way of its being the truckers' paradise—is the poor railroad service and high transportation charges.

GREENHOUSE VEGETABLES.

CHICAGO, March 24.—Cucumbers, 50c to $1.75 doz.; leaf lettuce, 20c to 22½c case; watercress, 10c to 20c doz.; radishes, 15c to 50c dozen bunches; mushrooms, 30c to 50c lb.

NEW YORK, March 23.—Mushrooms in fair demand and rather firm. Cucumbers firm for fancy. Lettuce generally poor. Radishes and rhubarb steady. Tomatoes in light supply, but moving slowly. Beet tops, $1 bu. box; No. 1 cucumbers, $1 to $1.50 doz.; No. 2 cucumbers, $3 to $4.50 box; lettuce, 25c to 75c doz.; mushrooms, 25c to 50c lb.; radishes, $2 to $4 per 100 bunches; rhubarb, 40c to 50c doz. bunches; tomatoes, 15c to 25c lb.; mint, 20c to 30c doz. bunches.

FORCING ASPARAGUS.

Forced asparagus brings a high price during the winter in the large markets. The usual plan is to dig up roots that are not less than four or five years old for this purpose. Those two or three years old do not produce stalks of sufficient thickness. When doing away with an old bed, it will pay to dig up the roots and store them in a shed where they are cool, but just clear of freezing. As many roots as there is space for can then be housed at a time. The roots are better for being well frozen before being lifted.

Forcing can be done either in a greenhouse, on the benches, or underneath. A warm cellar where mushrooms and rhubarb are forced also answers well. The stalks usually seen in winter are grown in the dark and are really more tender and of better flavor than when produced in the light. All that is necessary to do in forcing asparagus is to spread out the roots, pack the plants as closely as possible, and cover the whole with fine earth, giving a good soaking of water as soon as the covering is on, and keeping them moist at the root. In a night temperature of 65 degrees asparagus will be fit to cut in a little over two weeks and will continue to bear about three weeks. As soon as stalks become thin, throw out the roots and bring in another batch. In bunching for market, tie six or eight of the thickest stalks in each bunch. The smaller stalks should be tied together and will sell, but at a lower price. W.

tion and it is said to be the largest vegetable house west of Chicago, being 50x200 feet and sixteen feet to the ridge. It has four sets of ventilators, one run in each side and double runs of ventilators at the ridge. The sashes at the ridge are operated by the apparatus manufactured by the John C. Moninger Co., Chicago, and those on the side by the Evans Challenge machines. With so much ventilation it is easy to control the temperature, even in warm weather. The house has concrete gutters on the ground to carry the water. The glass is 16x18, double strength. The radiation is all 1¼-inch pipe, being fed with a 5-inch steam main, branching off into 2-inch flow pipes. The boiler-house shown in the illustration was destroyed last spring by fire and with it went 110 feet of adjoining greenhouse, but this was all back in working order in three days. The two ranges are heated by two eighty horse-power boilers.

Burpee's New FORDHOOK Musk Melon

A heavily netted melon, nicely ribbed, golden-red meat of exquisite flavor; very firm and the best long distance shipper today without ice. Running two and a half to three dozen melons to the bushel crate. A money-maker from the start.

Will grow "No Other"—so writes one of the most extensive growers for market whose farm is opposite our Sunnybrook Farm in New Jersey.

DEAR MR. BURPEE:—

Your NEW FORDHOOK CANTALOUPE is the most perfect cantaloupe I ever grew. It is about the same size as Improved Jenny Lind, very thick flesh, of orange-yellow, very small seed cavity, comparatively few seeds, flesh very solid and of very high flavor, flesh staying solid and firm after melon has become quite yellow, making it an excellent long distance shipper. The vines are healthy and a very strong grower, setting fruit close to hill and keep on setting fruit throughout the season to end of vine. They are well ribbed, very heavily netted, weighing about 2 pounds apiece.

Will grow no other than your FORDHOOK for my entire crop of 1908.

Sincerely yours,

FRANK J. RODE.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., George S. Green, Chicago; First Vice-pres., M. H. Duryea, New York; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. Twenty-sixth annual convention at Hotel Pontchartrain, Detroit, Mich., June 23 to 25, 1908.

For the full text of the national pure seed bill see page 42.

VISITED CHICAGO:—Mr. Bedford, of A. E. McKenzie Co., Brandon, Manitoba; J. A. Everitt, Indianapolis, Ind.; Charles Kimberlin, Santa Clara, Cal.

THE Chicago Set and Seed Co., Chicago, has been incorporated, with $10,000 authorized capital stock, by C. Williard Smith, Arthur M. Kracke and Eben F. Ruman.

PEA growers report contracts for the next year's crop about all placed. The acreage arranged for is about in line with last year and the price to be paid the farmer is not much in advance of the prices that have prevailed for the past two seasons.

THERE will be quite a surplus seed of the Red Globe variety of onion carried over, from all indications. The Yellow Globe will sell out better. Flats of all colors are pretty well cleaned up and there is a large present demand that no one seems to be able to meet.

It is asserted that the crop of onion seeds on the Illinois and Indiana marshes this year will be an important factor. One well posted grower says the yield is not so likely to be affected by smut as is that of the onions planted for seeds "up the river" in the California district.

MARKET garden trade in the central west has never been better than this year, according to reports. The weather has been more normal this year than for some years back and if it continues favorable through the balance of March and into April, 1908 is likely to be a record breaker.

TRADE in general is reported satisfactory. The jobbers are pleased with the number of fill-in orders that are arriving. The mail order houses report a larger volume of orders than even the month of March is expected to bring in. The onion set dealers are selling out in good shape, and counter trade is fully in line with the season.

BEANS have not been moving out as fast as they should so far and in the minds of some of the growers it is a conundrum as to whether to go in light or heavy on acreage for another year's crop. There seems to be a feeling that to go slow on many of the standard green-podded sorts will be safe. Opinions may change later on, however, as a few of the optimistic dealers look for a brisk demand for beans before the season is over.

CONSIDERABLE complaint comes in from the farmers because the present prices of all varieties of field seeds are higher than the printed prices that ruled January 1. The catalogue seedsman, when he quotes a price on field seeds, usually gets the worst of it, whether the prices go up or not, and the best plan seems to be to quote simply "market price" without any figures. In many of the catalogues this plan has been adopted, and with satisfactory results as far as reports show.

A NATIONAL corn congress is to be held at Council Bluffs, Ia., in December.

W. W. BARNARD Co., Chicago, says the sale of aster seeds to florists this season has been the largest on record.

SEEDSMEN generally say the present season is more nearly normal than any of those in the last three or four years.

PHILLIPE DE VILMORIN, of Vilmoren-Andrieux & Co., Paris, France, was recently elected a fellow of the Linnean Society.

THE Jackson Canning Co., Jackson, Tenn., has been incorporated, with $15,000 capital stock. One of its powers is to grow and sell seeds.

GOOD seed oats are hard to locate and the same will apply to all farm grains and to field corn. Green field peas are out of the market, apparently, and the yellow Canadian sort seems scarce enough.

E. J. CASTLE, a well-known sweet pea authority in England, died March 4, aged 40 years. He was for some years with the seed house of H. Caynell & Sons, Swanley, but recently had devoted himself to horticultural literature.

If the practices of certain parties not representative of the seed trade have brought upon the trade a flood of restrictive legislation, as seems not unlikely, it is better that a national law be adopted as a means of heading off enactments by the states, which would be conflicting and harassing while accomplishing no good purpose.

SOME of the market gardeners at Chicago have already planted peas on the high ground, and they say that onion seed will go into the ground next week, if no weather back-set takes place. The seedsmen are expecting some extra business later on, as there are likely to be some good stiff frosts about the time the peas germinate.

VEGETABLE BREEDING.

Continuing the subject of the improvement of vegetables by selection and by cross breeding, as begun in the REVIEW of March 5 and March 19, W. Van Fleet said:

Peppers.

The pepper is a very neat subject for crossing, and useful varieties may be produced with tolerable precision. It appears that development by pure hereditary selection has played a smaller part with the pepper than with most vegetables.

Potatoes.

The potato, as the most important vegetable propagated by division, has a different status from its congeners. New varieties are produced by selection among seedlings grown mostly from chance or self-pollinated seeds. It appears certain that intentional crossing or hybridization has played a minor role in the development of potato varieties. The breeding of the potato is more ardently pursued at the present time than that of any other vegetable; yet few experimenters are willing to claim they have actually produced crosses or hybrids. Every available species of tuber-bearing solanum is apparently being used by breeders in different countries in the hope of imparting vigor to the cross-bred progeny. The paucity of results, up to date, is quite remarkable, and appears to indicate that for practical results we must return to the old plan of growing seedlings in quantity from the best available varieties. This, in view of the progressive sterility of our best commercial varieties, is becoming an increasingly difficult matter.

Tomatoes.

The tomato is such a modern addition to our list of really important vegetables that its development from an ornamental curiosity to the most widely grown and valued of garden fruits lies almost within the memory of living man. Selection, as usual, was the potent and comparatively rapid means of changing the original small, flabby and seedy fruits to the large, solid and shapely tomatoes of today, but critical crossing has within the last fifteen years become an important factor in the production of superior varieties. Many breeders find the tomato a fascinating and practical subject for their efforts. It requires four or five years of rigid selection to sufficiently "fix" a cross-bred variety, if of markedly diverse parentage. There appears to be a particular tendency toward reversion to primitive forms in the third generation of cross-bred tomatoes. The classic development of the Trophy tomato, by twenty years of selection from the original cross of the primitive tomato or "love apple" with the angular garden tomato of 1850, made by Dr. Hand, of Baltimore, Md., has never been equaled and is not likely to be excelled by hurried modern introducers.

The practical vegetable breeding of the immediate future would seem to lie rather in efforts to produce varieties resistant to current diseases than in continual refinement of the edible portions. Increased vigor and resistance to germ infection appear to be of the highest importance in many varieties. Substantial progress has been made by varietal selection in opposing asparagus rust, potato blight and corn smut. A reasonably blight-resistant melon is at the present time most ardently desired. Many factors go to make up the complex modern demands on vegetable growth. All are important, but vigor and disease resistance are so in the highest degree.

WARD'S SEED POLICY.

It has been the art of advertising as much as any other factor which has led to the success of the big general mail order houses, and in this connection the seed trade should be interested in the following introduction to the seed catalogue of Montgomery Ward & Co., Chicago, published over the signature of A. Montgomery Ward:

When this firm decided three years ago to enter the seed business, we did so with the full realization that we were going to either win friends or make enemies, as seeds are something that must be absolutely dependable. The policy of this firm has always been to protect the interests of its customers, so at the very beginning of our entry into the seed world—before a dollar's worth of stock was purchased—I decided that we would either handle the highest grade of seeds or we would keep out of the seed business entirely.

H. W. Fisher, in charge of our Seed Division, understands my policy and is devoting his personal efforts toward stocking only absolutely reliable seeds. We not only deal with reliable producers, but as far as possible investigate the conditions under which our seeds are grown. Seeds must be right or trouble follows. Mr. Fisher has instructions to supply seeds that will make us a reputation and bring us permanent customers.

It is to be regretted that a binding guarantee cannot be given on seeds; we would be only too glad to guarantee every seed sold by us, but conditions are such that no firm can issue a seed guarantee. We offer our seeds with the fullest confidence that they are as dependable as it is possible to obtain them.

COMPLIMENTS OF THE SEASON.

When Harry A. Bunyard, with A. T. Boddington, read in the REVIEW of the successful convention of the Illinois State Florists' Association, he wrote his friend, President Albert T. Hey, as follows:

There's a good friend of mine, named Hey,
In Illinois, far, far away;
If he thinks he's forgot,
He's most certainly not;
He'll be called on some fine summer day.

ENVOI.

All florists are Christians at heart,
Though they swear when the seeds fail to start;
But Boddington's seeds
Fill everyone's needs,
If the grower will but do his part.

Upon receipt of this effusion, President Hey, not to be outdone in courtesy, replied as follows:

Florists in general,
Regardless of creeds,
Would be better Christians
If they used Boddington's seeds.

MANN'S PURE SEED BILL.

March 20 the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives reported the Mann Pure Seed Bill, with recommendation for its passage. The report recites that "the United States has become the dumping ground for all the worthless seed of the world. All the seed looks alike to the average man. He doesn't know the difference between turnip seed at 40 cents a pound, cabbage seed worth $2 a pound, and cauliflower seed sold at $40 a pound. The frightful extent to which the adulteration of seed has grown in our country is a menace to the interests of the farmer, gardener, horticulturist and honest seed man."

The report continues: "The provisions of this bill are very strict as to the character of seed which is imported and also as to deliberate and wilful adulterations of domestic seed, but do not apply harshly to seed raised in this country and which is not deliberately adulterated."

The report recites much that the Department of Agriculture has discovered as to poor seeds in its tests and quotes the disclaimer from a large number of

Sec. 7. That the term "Territory" as used in this Act shall include the insular possessions of the United States. The word "person" as used in this Act shall be construed to import both the plural and the singular, as the case competition that the grower can ship much stock which he would have considerable trouble in delivering to the more particular city retailer. Again, the out-of-town storekeeper usually wants a lot of additional stock and here there is a chance to make a small profit. But when the weather begins to get warm and the outside stock commences to get plentiful, then the country retailer begins to find out that he can do without lots of stock that he had to buy in the winter. Finally, when he gets a couple of superheated shipments, he neglects to order again until the following fall. By this time the wholesaler has to look for other places to get rid of his fast gathering surplus, and he begins to drop in once or twice a day to see his friend the store man and is surprised and somewhat offended that he is apparently not overwelcomed. And then, to add insult to injury, as it were, the retailer seems to prefer to patronize the Japanese grower.

This may sound somewhat forced, but it is a pertinent question with both parties, and a vital one with the retailer, for usually with him the greatest trouble in the winter is where to buy his flowers, and in the summer where to sell them. The Japanese growers are more crafty; they apparently realize the fact that the grower who brings stock in the winter will be honored with trade in the summer. They are not entirely above charging all the traffic will bear at certain seasons, but even this fact is usually condoned by the retailer to a great extent. But when you inform him a week before Christmas that you are cutting very little stock just now, that, in fact, everything is off crop and you will not be able to supply anything for several weeks, do not be surprised to find out about April 1 that the Japanese grower seems to have better luck than you have in disposing of his products. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We are having the nicest weather imaginable. Warm sunshine and cool nights have brought into town an avalanche of flowers of all descriptions such as has rarely been seen at this time of the year. Last year during the month of March we had incessant showers and flowers were generally scarce and fully thirty per cent higher than now. Business in comparison with last year, however, even with our beautiful weather, is twenty-five per cent less in volume. The fact that we are in the midst of Lent has considerable to do with it, but even in the funeral line there is little doing.

We are getting Enchantress and other fancy carnations at our own prices. Roses, especially Maid and Bride, are also to be had in any quantity at from $3 to $6 per hundred. The reason for the excess of flowers at this time is the fact of the continued warm, bright weather, which ordinarily we do not have before next month, and this, coupled with the Lenten dullness, has regulated the supply and demand, to the financial loss of the growers.

With other kinds of stock there is little to record. Easter lilies are plentiful and cost the retailers from $1.50 to $3 per dozen. Valley is in oversupply and nets the growers about $3 per hundred. Daffodils are on the wane and, although cheap, are being bought up fairly well. Violets can be had at almost any price. Apparently the growers have no combination of prices this year and the florists have benefited greatly thereby. Wild maidenhair has almost entirely taken the place of the tame variety and is a very welcome adjunct to the store men.

Smilax bids fair to be scarce at Easter, from what I am able to observe, but calla lilies have never been so plentiful as they are this season and can be had at almost any price.

Narcissus poeticus has made its appearance and has taken the place of the other varieties of narcissi. A few early sweet peas are offered at $1 per dozen bunches, but it looks like forcing the season and they are not yet in much demand. Showy tulips are seen everywhere, in pots and baskets, but they have not had an extensive sale thus far this season.

Various Notes.

Jack Sievers has retired from the Sievers Floral Co., but expects to embark in business again shortly.

DUTY ON CREPE PAPER.

The United States Circuit Court for the southern district of New York has decided that crepe paper is subject to duty at 5 cents per pound and fifteen per centum ad valorem.

The term crepe paper, in paragraph 397, tariff act of 1897, is descriptive, referring to the method of manufacture, and includes a waterproof paper weighing about fifty pounds per ream, which has been subjected to a creping process.

The decision grew out of a protest by an importer who claimed a lower rate of duty. In affirming the assessment of duty, Judge Hough said in part:

"The importation under consideration is paper in the sense that it is clearly made of paper stock. It weighs before creping or crinkling about fifty pounds to the ream. It is partially, at all events, waterproof, and is used largely, if not principally, for the purpose of ornamentally covering flower pots or other receptacles for flowers sold by florists, and usually rather damp. It is not denied that this paper has been creped or crinkled by a machine similar in construction and operation to that producing crepe tissue paper or crepe tissue such as has been long known to the trade.

NEW CANNAS=1908

ROSEA GIGANTEA. This beautiful variety has extra large flowers, which are borne in such abundance that the mass of color on each plant is amazing. Single petals are 2½ inches across; color, a deep, rich rose, almost a coral carmine. Plants make a vigorous growth, producing unusually fine clumps of green foliage. Height, 4 feet. (A great favorite with visitors to our trial grounds.) Strong plants, $2.00 each, prepaid; $18.00 per doz. by express, not prepaid.

GLADIO-FLORA. Remarkable for the unusual shape of the flowers, which look like large Gladioli. Petals are not long, but short and rounded and so wide they overlap each other, thus giving a very attractive appearance to the flowers. Color is crimson, changing to carmine rose with an uneven edge of gold to each petal. Height, 3½ feet. Price, strong plants, $2.00 each, prepaid; $18.00 per doz. by express, not prepaid.

METEOR. Meteor is a vigorous grower with healthy green foliage. It is highly valued because of its magnificent flowers, fully four inches across, and abundance of bloom. Color is a deep crimson; very rich; each plant usually throws up five to six trusses of buds, which continue blooming luxuriantly all summer through. Price, plants or dormant roots, 75c each, postpaid; $6.00 per doz. by express, not prepaid.

WILLIAM SAUNDERS—(1907). The flowers are large, of splendid form and are borne very freely in immense clusters. The color is a deep, rich, shining scarlet, lightly dappled with crimson. Foliage is a rich bronze. Height, 3½ to 4 feet. We believe that Wm. Saunders is decidedly the most perfect canna of this type that has been introduced. Those who tried Wm. Saunders in 1907 say it cannot be excelled. We offer plants only: 60c ea. postpaid; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100 by express, not prepaid.

60 OTHER VARIETIES. SEND FOR OUR LIST AND PRICES.

"The importation has been assessed under paragraph 397, and appellant alleges that it is dutiable only as paper not otherwise provided for, under paragraph 402.

"The importer relies upon the principle of Loeb & Schoenfeld v. United States, asserting that crepe paper was a well-known commercial term when the act of 1897 was passed; that there is nothing in the phraseology of the act indicating that congress intended by the phrase crepe paper anything else but the particular article thus known to the trade by that name.

"In other words, the question is whether crepe paper is a descriptive term or a trade term. The phrase is also said to be a commercial designation because it seems to have been inserted in paragraph 397 to meet the decision in Dennison Mfg. Co. v. United States. If that be true, it appears to me that, from the description of the article there under consideration, the paper now before the court very much resembles in weight, manufacture, and probable appearance, the thing considered in the Dennison case. That decision held no more than that an article weighing up to about forty-eight pounds to the ream, made of much tougher and stronger stock than tissue paper, and known as crepe paper and incapable of manufacture upon a tissue paper machine, could not be assessed as tissue paper. So far, therefore, as that case goes it appears to me to hold against the petitioner-appellant. From the evidence I am left in doubt whether the article under consideration is or is not commercially known as crepe paper. The decision of the board is that it is so known. The presumption in favor of this finding of fact therefore prevents a disturbance of it. I am also of opinion that the phrase crepe paper as used in the paragraphs referred to is properly a descriptive term referring to the method of manufacture, and is not a trade term at all."

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYMEN.

Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Vice-Pres., O. M. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The 33d annual convention will be held at Milwaukee, June, 1908.

S. G. NELSON, of Swain Nelson & Sons, Chicago, has taken the order for landscape plans in connection with the proposed park work at Waterloo, Ia.

A HORTICULTURAL congress is to be held at Council Bluffs, Ia., December 19 and 20. A national apple exhibition is planned and the coöperation of nurserymen is sought.

THE Devils Lake Nursery has been incorporated at Devils Lake, N. D., with a capital stock of $5,000. The incorporators are John W. Maher, Henry Hale and J. E. Maher, all of Devils Lake.

MORE than 200 named varieties of the common lilac have been produced by hybridists, the new varieties far surpassing the parent kind in range of brilliant colors, double flowers, size of the clusters and other characteristics.

THE nurseries which have landscape departments report good business this season—if anything, better than in previous years. This part of the business is sure of large development in capable hands, especially in the middle west.

THE Storrs & Harrison Co., Painesville, O., is making preparations for added water supply. There are several large storage tanks about the nursery and a four horse-power pumping engine has just been purchased of the Standard Pump & Engine Co., Cleveland, to pump water from the river for the system. It replaces a two horse-power machine previously used.

THE National Council of Horticulture says in its press service that the Amoor lilac is one of the showy varieties which should have more general favor. It is a tall, slender shrub, ten to twelve feet in height, which unfolds its leaves early in the spring and produces large clusters of yellowish white flowers early in June. It retains its deep green foliage well through the season.

JOHN J. DUNCAN, the nurseryman of Minneapolis, Minn., recently spent three weeks in Texas, looking for a suitable location for the establishment of a nursery there, and it is reported that he has now secured an option on a large tract of land at Beaumont, Jefferson county, on the coast of the Gulf. It is said that he will return to Beaumont in June and will then decide whether to remove to the southern state. Mr. Duncan thinks that the greatest market for the nurseryman will be on the Gulf coast for many years to come.

THE SEEDLESS APPLE FAILURE.

Under order of common pleas court, Receiver George W. Welles, of the Michigan Spencer Seedless Apple Co., offered for sale at public auction at Toledo, O., March 18, 285,000 apple seedlings and 3,000 "seedless" grape vines. The auction took place in the county clerk's office.

Receiver Welles sold 60,000 three-year-old apple seedlings and 225,000 one and two-year-old apple seedlings. Of these, 75,000 have been budded with Speneer
